THE plan of this Work is extenſive beyond any thing that has yet been attempted of the kind in the Engliſh Language. It was intended to introduce not only all the appellatives or common words, whether radical, derivative or compound, obſolete, cant or provincial; but all proper names of men and women, heathen gods and goddeſſes, heroes, princes, poets, hiſtorians, wiſe men and philoſophers of ſpecial note, whether ancient or modern: Of all the principal kingdoms, cities, towns, ſeas and rivers in the known world, more eſpecially in Great Britain and Ireland: Of beaſts, birds, fiſhes and inſects: Of trees, plants, herbs, minerals and foſſils. The terms of art in chymiſtry, pharmacy, heraldry, divinity, mathematics, mechanics, manufactures and huſbandry. The derivations from the ancient, modern and learned languages, in which ſpecial attention has been given to the mere Engliſh ſcholar, by a proper analyſis and full explanation of the originals. The various ſenſes, with the uſe and conſtruction illuſtrated by examples, and ſupported by authorities where any thing appeared to be uncommon or doubtful. The pronunciation pointed out, and aſſiſted by a new method of placing the accent, and by notes on the ſounds of the letters where it was judged neceſſary. The different ſpellings preſerved and diſtinguiſhed as ancient or modern, common or uncommon, correct or incorrect: and, in a word, every thing which might be thought requiſite to render the work worthy of the title it bears, and under which it is now recommended to the public. And all this to be compriſed in as narrow a compaſs as poſſible, leſt the ſize ſhould ſuperſede the intention of general uſefulneſs, and acceptance to the Engliſh reader.

The execution of a plan ſo very extenſive, and yet in ſome reſpects limited, muſt doubtleſs have failed in ſome particulars. Errata of the preſs and other trifling defects, in a work of this nature, could not be avoided. The compounds and tranſmutations of the Engliſh Language are exceedingly numerous; almoſt any adjective, by an ellipſis, is converted into a ſubſtantive, and almoſt any ſubſtantive, by a kind of compoſition, is transformed into an adjective. All which compounds and tranſmutations could not well be collected: they have been and are ſtill fabricated by the caprice or different caſt of the writers who uſe them; and are, perhaps, capable of an endleſs variety. The obſolete ſpellings from Chaucer, and other cotemporary authors, might have been greatly increaſed, but thoſe which are here introduced, may be thought, perhaps, more than ſufficient to illuſtrate the orthography of that period. Nor was it thought neceſſary or expedient to rake into the mere cant of any profeſſion, much leſs of gameſters, highwaymen, pickpockets and gipſies.

The final k, after c, in words derived from the learned languages, though carefully retained by Johnſon and other writers, has been omitted, in conformity to modern cuſtom and the originals. For it ſeems to me to be rather incongruous to write muſick from muſica, eſpecially as the k has been exploded by general conſent from the derivatives muſician and muſical. The uſe of the hyphen in compound words has, of late, been much diſcontinued. It has an awkward appearance in many inſtances, and is therefore generally omitted in this compilation.

The derivations, for the moſt part, have been illuſtrated from the roots of the originals, though the words to be explained might in ſome few inſtances be more nearly allied to the offspring. For example, when a word comes immediately diately from the French, and the French from the Latin, the latter has bee preferred to the former. And when any word is introduced from the Saxon, th Latin or any other language, without an exemplar, it is to be taken for grante that the ſpelling in both languages is preciſely coincident. Where the root i obſolete, incorrect, local, &c. the derivatives have been generally omitted ; and where the original has preciſely the ſame ſignification with the word derived from it, a particular explanation was judged unneceſſary.

To avoid a too frequent recurrence to foreign originals, the words of a cognate ſignification, or ſuch as come from the ſame root, are not always referred to that root or to its offspring in the ſame language, but are frequently noted as derived from each other, eſpecially when there is any reſemblance or analogy to countenance ſuch a notation.

The difficulty of explaining a variety of words in common uſe, many of which have numerous, collateral, and yet different ſenſes, and many of theſe better felt than deſcribed, will, it is hoped, apologize for any obſcurity, bombaſt, tautology, or inelegance of expreſſion which may be obſerved in the explanation.

As this dictionary is deſigned for general uſe, ſome will doubtleſs think there has been too much, and others, perhaps, that there has been too little preciſion obſerved in this compilation. The work, however, ſuch as it is, the author now ventures into the world, hoping he has but little to fear from the manly criticiſm of the true ſcholar, and ſtill leſs from the known candour of the impartial public.

POSTSCRIPT.

As a work of this nature muſt of neceſſity take up a great deal of time in printing, it was thought requiſite to go to the preſs before the manuſcript copy was quite completed. From this circumſtance a few words, which have ſince occurred to the compiler, and which could not be inſerted in the body of the work, are added by way of Supplement.

The defects of common dictionaries have long been felt. A work on this plan has been much deſired. The author has endeavoured to render it as complete as poſſible. He has introduced, either in the body of the work or in the Supplement, all the words he could find or remember. But the copiouſneſs of the Engliſh Language, as might well be expected, leaves him ſhort of that perfection which the plan ſeems to require : and therefore, after all that has been done, he ſeeks his apology and his conſolation in that well known adage :

" To err is human, to forgive divine."

GRAMMATICAL DISSERTATIONS;

OR,

A Comprehenſive GRAMMAR of the ENGLISH TONGUE.

DISSERTATION I.

On the Sounds of the Letters in the Engliſh Alphabet.

SOUNDS are fugitive things, hard to catch, and difficult to retain; and therefore it is no wonder ſo much ſhould have been ſaid, with ſo little agreement, by thoſe learned writers who have profeſſedly treated on this ſubject.

I think it muſt be allowed, that the poſſible, and perhaps the actual, ſounds of the vowels in the Engliſh alphabet will admit of an endleſs variety. But it is the felicity of the Engliſh language, that the far greater part of theſe different ſounds are too trifling to be worthy of notice.

The whole octave or practical ſcale of muſic admits but of twelve diſtinct ſounds called ſemi tones; and though there muſt be, according to the nature of the ſcale, an infinite gradation of ſounds between each of theſe intervals; yet they are all judged too minute to be reduced to practice. Juſt ſo it is with the ſounds of the Engliſh vowels; and that not merely by a provincial or corrupt pronunciation, but as uſed by real ſcholars, and, if I am not greatly miſtaken, by the poliſhed ſpeakers in the metropolis itſelf.

Nor is there any great inconveniency ariſing from this variety of ſounds, for in unaccented, ſhort, and inſignificant ſyllables, the ſounds of the five vowels in pronunciation will be found nearly coincident. It muſt be a nice ear that can diſtinguiſh the difference of ſound in the concluding ſyllable of the following words. Altar, alter, manor, murmur, ſatyr.

The rules of proper pronunciation, ſo far as they reſpect the diſtinct and different ſounds of the vowels, may be reduced to a ſmall number. The epithets ſhort and long have been introduced with evident impropriety; for a long ſound, properly ſpeaking, is nothing more than a ſhort ſound increaſed in quantity, or drawn out to a greater length in pronunciation. The broad and the narrow are certainly more expreſſive; and, if we want a further diſtinction, let it be called the middle or intermediate.

Thus the firſt letter or vowel in the alphabet, will be found to have three diſtinct ſounds: as in the words, all, an, ale. The two laſt I call the proper ſounds of this letter, becauſe they belong to this ſingle letter and to no other. Theſe, therefore, ſhould be carefully noted, and kept as diſtinct and pure as poſſible.

The ſecond vowel has likewiſe three ſounds; as in the words, them, the, me. The firſt and ſecond are the proper ſounds of this letter, and are both ſufficiently diſtinguiſhed from the laſt: for I cannot be perſuaded to think, that the e in the and me, and the ee in thee, which is the ſame thing, are to be ſounded exactly alike. It is confeſſed, that among fine ſpeakers, eſpecially in London, there is a prevailing affectation of confounding theſe two ſounds, or rather of loſing the ſecond in the laſt; and this perhaps may be conſidered, pardon the expreſſion, as one of the provincial modes of pronunciation in the metropolis. For want of this diſtinction, however, many words are confounded in the Engliſh language, which ſeem to have a ſufficient claim to be diſtinguiſhed: ſuch as, thee, the; meet, meat; beet, beat; and many others that might be enumerated. Before I diſmiſs this article, I beg leave to mention what I look upon to be another corrupt mode of pronunciation in London. It is that in which the firſt ſound of this letter is converted into that of the broad u; as though the ſound of the e in her, and that of u in cur were exactly coincident. I will only add that the middle ſound of the e, for which I have been contending, is, or at leaſt, ought to be, retained in the words, hero, rebuild, refrain, adheſion, coheſion, and others of a like formation. Would it not be beſt likewiſe to retain the firſt and proper ſound of the e in hermetical, hernia, hermaphrodite, and many others that might be mentioned?

The third vowel has likewiſe three diſtinct ſounds; as in the words, bind, bird, bill. The firſt of theſe is the proper ſound, the ſecond being coincident with that of the full u, and the third with that of the narrow e.

The o has, I think, four diſtinct ſounds; as in the words, cloth, ton, tone, tomb. The third is the proper ſound of this vowel; the firſt being found to coincide with the broad a, the ſecond with the broad, and the fourth with the narrow u.

The

The u has three diſtinct ſounds; as in the words us, uſe, rule. The middle is the proper ſound of this vowel, the firſt coincides with the ſecond, and the third with the fourth ſound of the o.

The y, as a vowel, may be conſidered in ſound as the ſubſtitute of the i.

Thus we have what may be called the proper ſounds of the vowels, which are ſeven in number; two of the a, two of the e, one of the i, one of the o, and one of the u. But in order to ſee which other vocal ſounds are to be diſtinguiſhed in the Engliſh language, we muſt have recourſe to the various combinations of the vowels uſed in the formation of ſyllables.

The æ has one ſound: as in Cæſar, and coincides with the middle ſound of the e, or rather with that of the narrow i.

The ai has perhaps but one ſound: as in the words, praiſe, fail, quail, and ſeems to be one of the proper diphthongs as compriſing the ſounds of the two vowels.

The au has three ſounds: as in the words, author, aunt, gauge. Theſe reſpectively coincide with the broad, middle, and narrow ſounds of the letter a.

The aw has one ſound: as in the word, awl, which correſponds with the broad a.

Ay has one ſound: as in bay, lay, which coincides with the ſound of the ai.

EA has three ſounds: as in the words, heart, heaven, ſeat. The firſt coincides with the middle ſound of the a, the ſecond is perhaps beſt diſtinguiſhed by that kind of uncertain ſound which any of the vowels may acquire in a ſhort or inſignificant ſyllable, and the laſt coincides with the middle e.

EE has one ſound: as in ſee, thee, and coincides with the narrow i.

EI has two ſounds: as in weight, deceit. The firſt coincides with the ai, and may be conſidered as another proper diphthong, the ſecond correſponds to the narrow i.

EO has three ſounds: as in the words, George, leopard, people. The firſt coincides with the broad o, the ſecond with the broad e, and the third with the narrow i.

EU has one ſound: as in feud, and coincides with the middle u. EW has likewiſe one ſound, as in few, which coincides with the proper ſound of the u.

EY has two ſounds: as in the words, eyre, and rey. The firſt coincides with the broad, and the ſecond with the narrow i.

IE has three ſounds: fie, friend, chief. The firſt coincides with the broad i, the ſecond with the middle e, and the laſt with the narrow i.

OA has two ſounds: as in broad, boat. The firſt coincides with the broad a, the ſecond with the proper ſound of the o.

OI has one ſound: as in oil, toil, and makes what we may call another proper diphthong.

OO has three ſounds: as in the words, floor, flood, fool. The firſt coincides with the proper ſound of the o, the ſecond with the broad, and the third with the narrow u.

OW has two ſounds: as know, now. The firſt coincides with the proper o, and the laſt is the ſound of a proper diphthong.

OE has one ſound: as in Phœbe, and coincides with the middle e, or otherwiſe with that of the narrow i.

OU has three ſounds: as in noun, could, though. The firſt coincides with the ow, the ſecond with the broad u, and the laſt with the proper ſound of the o.

OY has one ſound: as in boy, joy, and is a proper diphthong.

UA has two ſounds: as in the words guard, perſuade. The firſt coincides with the middle, and the ſecond with the narrow ſound of the a.

UE has one ſound: as in true, and coincides with the narrow u.

UI has three ſounds: as in the words, guide, build, fruit. The firſt coincides with the proper ſound of the i, the ſecond with the narrow i, and the third with the narrow u.

EAU has two ſounds: as in the words, beauty, beau. The firſt correſponds with the proper ſound of the u, the other with the proper ſound of the o.

IEU has two ſounds: as in lieu, lieutenant, unleſs the laſt may be rather conſidered as a corruption. The firſt coincides with the narrow u, the laſt has the ſound of if.

From the foregoing obſervations, in which I have endeavoured, as much as poſſible, to diveſt myſelf of all provincial modes of pronunciation both in town and country; we may deduce the following table.

A broad, O broad, au, aw, oa.	Ball, cloth, call, awl, broad.
A middle proper, au, ea.	At, aunt, heart.
A narrow proper, ea.	Gale, gauge.
E broad proper, ea.	Hēm, head.
E middle proper, ie.	The, friend.
I narrow, E narrow, ee, ei, æ, œ.	Mill, me, meet, deceit, Cæſar, Phœbe.
I broad proper, y, ie, ye.	Bind, by, fie, pye.
O proper, oa, ou, ow, eau.	Bone, boat, foul, blow, beau.

U pro-

U proper, eau. - - -	Uſe, beauty.
U broad, O middle, I middle, oo. -	Cud, ton, bird, blood.
U narrow, O narrow, ou, ieu, oo. -	Rule, tomb, could, lieu, too.
AI, AY, EI, proper. - -	Laid, prayed weighed.
OI, OY, proper. - - -	Oil, toil, joy.
OU, OW, proper. - - -	Noun, now.

C has two modifications, the hard, and the ſoft: as in cull, cell. It is always hard, like k, before a, o, u, and all conſonants, and at the end of words: as, call, coal, cut, public. But ſoft, like s, before i, e, and y: as in cit, ceaſe, cypreſs.

G has likewiſe a hard and a ſoft modification: as in gun, gin. It is always hard before a, o, u, and all conſonants, and at the end of words: as in get, got, gut, glad, jug. For the moſt part, ſoft before e, i, and y: as in gem, gill, clergy. But all proper names in the Bible have g hard before e, and i: as in Gera, Gilboa: g is likewiſe hard in many Engliſh words before e, and i: as in geeſe, geld, get, gear, girl, give, giddy, dagger, anger; and in many more which may be ſupplied by obſervation.

CH has one hard, and two ſoft modifications: as in Baruch, arch, chaiſe. The firſt prevails in words of Hebrew and Greek original, and the laſt in ſuch as come from the French.

PH, when joined in the ſame ſyllable, is ſounded like f: as in Aſaph, elephant.

S has two modifications, a ſhort, and a flat: as in this, thoſe. The flat ſound prevails in all words made plural or increaſed by the addition of s: as in pins, foxes, loves.

TH has likewiſe a ſharp and a flat ſound: as in thin, thine.

TI before a vowel is frequently ſoftened down to ſh: as in ſtation, nation, in which the i is nearly if not quite loſt.

W, when uſed as a vowel, has the ſound of u: as in few, new; but when uſed as a conſonant it has a ſound peculiar to itſelf: as in we, William.

N. B. The other conſonants have little or no variation.

DISSERTATION II.

On the Parts of Speech, and the Inflections of Words.

THE kinds of words, or parts of ſpeech, in the Engliſh language, are ten. Article, ſubſtantive, adjective, pronoun, verb, participle, adverb, conjunction, prepoſition and interjection.

The Latin Grammarians, without the article, which they have not in their Language, make eight parts of ſpeech, confounding the ſubſtantive and adjective, under the common name of a noun: but this is a manifeſt impropriety. The ſubſtantive and the adjective are certainly as diſtinct parts of ſpeech as the noun and the pronoun, or the verb and the adverb. Several other diſtributions have been propoſed by different Engliſh authors, which we need not enumerate. And one very ingenious writer ſeems to give it as his opinion that all diviſions on this ſubject are equally uncertain and arbitrary. But notwithſtanding this, it is preſumed, the diviſion given above will be found, on the matureſt deliberation, to have a preciſion which cannot well be controverted.

Of an ARTICLE.

An article is a part of ſpeech ſet before nouns to fix their vague ſignification: as a man, the man; an houſe, the houſe. The articles are a, an, and the.

Of a NOUN.

A Noun, or ſubſtantive, is the name of any perſon, place, or thing: as John, London, honor, goodneſs.

There are two numbers; the ſingular, which ſpeaks of one: as a man, a troop: and the plural, which ſpeaks of more than one: as, men, troops. The plural is uſually formed by adding s to the ſingular: as, noun, nouns; verb, verbs.

When the ſingular ends in s, x, ch, or ſh, the plural is formed by adding the ſyllable es: as, miſs, miſſes; box, boxes; peach, peaches; bruſh, bruſhes. When the ſingular ends in y with a conſonant before it, the plural is formed by changing the y into ies: as, lady, ladies; cherry, cherries. When the ſingular ends in f, or fe, the plural is formed by changing the f, or fe, into ves: as, life, lives; half, halves, &c. except dwarf, grief, hoof, muff, &c. which take s, to make the plural. Sometimes the plural is formed by adding the ſyllable en: as, ox, oxen: ſometimes by changing the vowel: as, man, men: and ſometimes by changing the vowels, and conſonants: as, penny, pence; mouſe, mice. Some few words, coming immediately from the Hebrew, form the plural by adding im to the ſingular: as, cherub, cherubim; ſeraph, ſeraphim. Some from the Greek, ending in on, change the on into a: as, phænomenon, phænomena. Some from the Latin in us, change the us into i: as, radius, radii; magus, magi. Some nouns have no plural: as, wheat, &c. others no ſingular: as, aſhes, &c. and ſome are the ſame in both numbers: as, ſheep, &c.

&c. There are two genders; the maſculine, and the feminine. The maſculine denotes the he-kind: as, a man, a prince. The feminine denotes the ſhe-kind: as, a woman, a princeſs. Nouns ſignifying things without life, are properly of no gender: as, a pen, a table.

By a common figure in the Engliſh tongue, the ſun is of the maſculine; the moon, the church, ſhips, and frequently countries and virtues, ſuch as France, Spain, faith, hope, &c. are of the feminine gender.

Here likewiſe it may be neceſſary to obſerve,

Maſculine.	Feminine.	Maſculine.	Feminine.	Maſculine.	Feminine.

Nouns have two caſes; the nominative, and the genitive: the genitive caſe is formed by adding s, with an apoſtrophe, to the nominative: as, men, men's; ox, ox's.

NOTE. In the formation of this caſe I have complied with a late refinement; and what I really think a corrupt cuſtom. The genitive caſe, in my opinion, might be much more properly formed by adding s, or, when the pronunciation requires it, es, without an apoſtrophe: as, men, mens; ox, oxes; horſe, horſes; aſs, aſſes.

This caſe undoubtedly came from the Saxon, and the beſt Engliſh writers after the Norman Conqueſt, even down to the times of Chaucer and the Reformation, formed it juſt in the ſame manner they did the plural number, viz. by the addition of s, es, or is, and were rather ſparing in the uſe of it. After that the is and es were diſcontinued by degrees, though the latter, in a few inſtances, is retained to this day in our verſion of the Bible.

As to the apoſtrophe, it was ſeldom uſed to diſtinguiſh the genitive caſe till about the beginning of the preſent century, and then ſeems to have been introduced by miſtake. At that time the genitive caſe was ſuppoſed to have had its original from a contraction: as, John's book, for John his book: but that notion has been ſufficiently exploded: and therefore the uſe of the apoſtrophe, eſpecially in thoſe inſtances where the pronunciation requires an additional ſyllable, is, I preſume, quite indefenſible. To write ox's, aſs's, fox's, and at the ſame time pronounce it oxes, aſſes, foxes, is ſuch a departure from the original formation, at leaſt in writing, and ſuch an inconſiſtent uſe of the apoſtrophe as cannot be equalled perhaps in any other language; and though it may be ſaid that the apoſtrophe has ſome propriety as a note of diſtinction, yet no one, I think, who has any knowledge of grammar, can well miſtake the plural number for the genitive caſe. However, it appears to me, at preſent, to be a diſtinction of very little importance. Formerly there were notes uſed to diſtinguiſh the ablative caſe ſingular, of Latin nouns of the firſt declenſion, and the genitive of the fourth, which are now laid aſide by correct writers, and I cannot but think that, ſometime or other, this will be the fate of the apoſtrophe in the genitive caſe.

Of an ADJECTIVE.

An adjective is a word that ſignifies the quality of any perſon, place, or thing: as, a good man, a great city, a fine houſe.

Moſt adjectives have, at leaſt, two degrees of compariſon; which are commonly called the comparative, and the ſuperlative.

The comparative is formed, for the moſt part, by adding er to the poſitive: as, long, longer; ſhort, ſhorter: the ſuperlative by adding eſt: as, long, longeſt, &c.

NOTE. Long is the poſitive ſtate of the adjective; and therefore, as many authors obſerve, cannot be properly called a ſtep or degree.

Theſe degrees of compariſon are frequently formed by the adverbs, very, infinitely, more, moſt, leſs, leaſt: as, more ſhort, very, moſt, or infinitely ſhort; leſs common, leaſt common, &c. There are a few adjectives peculiar in their compariſon: as, good, better, beſt; bad, worſe, worſt, &c.

Of a PRONOUN.

A Pronoun is a word uſed inſtead of a noun, to avoid the too frequent repetition of the ſame word: as, "The man is merry, he laughs, he ſings."

The following pronouns (it only excepted) have three caſes; nominative, genitive, and accuſative, in each number.

Note. Some Grammarians would have mine, thine, ours, yours, &c. to be the only genitive caſes of the primitive pronouns; and my, thy, &c. to be pronominal adjectives derived from them; but as his, and its, which are confeſſedly genitive caſes, are joined to nouns as well as my, thy, &c. I thought beſt to range them as I have done above, and ſhall provide for the proper uſe of each variation in the rules of ſyntax.

Pronominal adjectives, ſuch as ten, forty, fifty, &c. and ſome others, ſeem to have a genitive caſe regularly formed by adding s to the nominative; as, ten, tens.

Note. The other pronouns, which, what, &c. have no variation.

Of a VERB.

A Verb is a word that ſignifies the acting, or being of a perſon, place, or thing: as, the man calls, the city ſtands, the tree falls, I am. The verb that ſignifies merely being is neuter: as, I am, he is: verbs that ſignify doing are active: as, I ſpeak the word, I wrote the letter.

Note. Properly ſpeaking, there is no paſſive verb in the Engliſh language; for though I am loved, is commonly called a paſſive verb, yet loved is no part of the verb, but a participle, or adjective derived of the verb, love.

I am very ſenſible, that the greateſt man*, perhaps, that ever yet wrote on this ſubject, is of a different opinion. He ſays, "There are three kinds of verbs; active, paſſive, and neuter." And when he comes to the grammatical reſolution of this ſentence, "In whom I am well "pleaſed," he tells us, that am is "the indicative mode, preſent time, and firſt perſon ſingular of the neuter verb, to be; well, an adverb; pleaſed, the paſſive participle of the verb to "pleaſe, making with the auxiliary verb am, a paſſive verb." The conſideration of this, I muſt confeſs, could by no means induce me to ſuppreſs the above Note. In parſing, every word ſhould be conſidered as a diſtinct part of ſpeech; for, though two or more words may be united to form a mode, a tenſe, or a compariſon; yet, it ſeems quite improper to unite two or more words to make a noun, a verb, an adjective, &c.

Verbs intranſitive, or ſuch as do not paſs over or convey their force to any object: as, ſleep, walk, run, &c. are commonly, though perhaps not very properly, called neuter verbs.

The noun or pronoun that ſtands before the active verbs in the above examples, may be called the agent, and that which ſtands before the neuter the ſubject of the verb: but the noun or pronoun that follows the active verbs, in the ſame examples, may be called the object of the verb.

There are four modes, or ways of uſing the verb; the indicative, the imperative, the potential, and the infinitive. The indicative expreſſes the action or being, directly and abſolutely: as, I am, he loves. The imperative commands or forbids: as, come, go, fear him, love him. The potential expreſſes the action or being as poſſible, or impoſſible, fit, or unfit: as, I may love, I may not love. The infinitive expreſſes the action or being indeterminately: as, to be, to love.

The

* Dr. Lowth, followed by Buchanan.

The potential mode, or form of the verb, does not, I think, in any caſe coincide with the indicative. It always has ſome reſpect to the power, will, &c. of the agent, by which, even when conditionality is out of the queſtion, it is diſtinguiſhed from the merely declarative form: the one declares the action done or to be done, without any further conſideration; the other declares not the action done or to be done, but the ability, inability, &c. of the agent to perform that action; and is therefore properly ſtiled the potential mode.

There are five tenſes, or times; the preſent, the imperfect, the perfect, the pluperfect, and the future. The preſent expreſſes the time that now is: as, I love; or am loving. The imperfect denotes the time paſt indeterminately: as, I loved; or, was loving. The perfect denotes the time paſt determinately; as, I have loved; or, have been loving. The pluperfect denotes the time paſt as prior to ſome other point of time ſpecified in the ſentence: as, I had loved; or, had been loving. The future denotes the time to come: as, I will or ſhall love; or, will or ſhall be loving.

Note. Theſe formations of the ſeveral tenſes ſeem to have reſpect both to the time and ſtate of the action ſignified by the verb. The preſent tenſe denotes the time that now is, and the action unfiniſhed: as, I write; or, I am now writing the letter. The imperfect denotes the time paſt indeterminately, and the action to have been compleated at any paſt time that may be ſpecified: as, I wrote the letter; or, I began and finiſhed the writing of the letter, this morning, yeſterday, a week ago, &c. The perfect denotes the time juſt paſt, and the action fully compleated: as, I have written the letter; or I have juſt now finiſhed the writing of the letter. The pluperfect denotes the time paſt, and the action to have been compleated prior to ſome other circumſtance ſpecified in the ſentence: as, I had written the letter; or, I had finiſhed the writing of the letter before you came in. The future denotes the time to come and the action to be compleated at any future time that may be mentioned: as, I will write the letter; or, I will begin and finiſh the writing of the letter, to-night, to-morrow, &c.

The other forms of theſe tenſes, viz. I am writing, I was writing, I have been writing, I had been writing, I will be writing, ſeem for the moſt part to leave the action undetermined.

Theſe modes and tenſes are partly formed by the verb itſelf, and partly by the aſſiſtance of ſigns. There are two modes formed from the verb itſelf; the indicative: as, I love; and the imperative: as, love thou: and likewiſe two tenſes; the preſent: as, I love; and the paſt: as, I loved.

The auxiliary ſigns are, to, do, did, have, had, ſhall, will, may, can, muſt, might, would, could, ſhould. To, is a ſign of the infinitive mode: as, to be; to love. May, can, muſt, might, would, could, ſhould, and their inflexions, mayeſt, canſt, mighteſt, wouldeſt, couldeſt, ſhouldeſt, are ſigns of the potential mode. Do, and its inflexions, doſt, doth, or does, are ſigns of the preſent tenſe. Did, and its inflexion, didſt, are ſigns of the imperfect tenſe. Have, and its inflexions, haſt, hath, or has, are ſigns of the perfect tenſe. Had, and its inflexion, hadſt, are ſigns of the pluperfect tenſe. Shall, and will, and their inflexions, ſhalt, and wilt, are ſigns of the future tenſe.

Note, the auxiliary ſigns ſeem to have the nature of adverbs.

Do, have, and will, when they are not joined to verbs to diſtinguiſh the circumſtance of time, are abſolutely verbs: as, I do it, I have it, I will it.

In verbs there is a reference to three perſons in each number: as, ſingular, I love, thou loveſt, he loveth; plural, we love, ye love, they love. The ſecond perſon of the verb in the ſingular number is formed out of the firſt by adding eſt, or ſt; the third by adding, eth th, es, or only s. St or th is added inſtead of eſt, and eth, to verbs ending in e: as, love, lo*veſt*: es to ſuch as end in ſs, x, or o: as fix, fix*es*; paſs, paſſes; go, go*es*. When eſt or eth is added to a verb ending in a ſingle conſonant preceded by a ſingle vowel bearing the accent, that conſonant is doubled: as, forget, forgetteſt, forgetteth. The firſt perſon ſpeaks of himſelf: as, "I John take thee Elizabeth." The ſecond perſon has the ſpeech directed to him, and is ſuppoſed to be preſent: as, "Thou Harry art a wicked fellow." The third perſon is ſpoken of or deſcribed, and ſuppoſed to be abſent: as, That Thomas is a good man."

The verb itſelf has but two terminations reſpecting time: as, love, and loved; which laſt may be called the inflexion of the preter, or paſt tenſe: and when this inflexion of the preter tenſe is formed by adding d, or ed, to the firſt perſon preſent tenſe, the verb is regular, and is declined after the following examples.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Preſent Tenſe. Sing. I love or do love, thou loveſt or doſt love, he loveth or loves, or doth or does love. Plu. We love or do love, ye love or do love, they love or do love.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I loved or did love, thou lovedſt or didſt love, he loved or did love. Plu. We loved or did love, ye loved or did love, they loved or did love.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I have loved, thou haſt loved, he hath loved. Plu. We have loved, ye have loved, they have loved.

Pluperfect Tenſe. Sing. I had loved, thou hadſt loved, he had loved. Plu. We had loved, ye had loved, they had loved.

Future Tenſe. Sing. I ſhall or will love, thou ſhalt or wilt love, he ſhall or will love. Plu. We ſhall or will love, ye ſhall or will love, they ſhall or will love.

Some verbs in this mode will admit of a ſecond future, eſpecially ſuch as ſignify the completing of any thing: as, I ſhall or will have finiſhed it to-morrow.

IMPERATIVE MODE.

Sing. Love, do thou love, or love thou. Plu. Love, do ye love, or love ye.

NOTE. Let, commonly called a ſign of the imperative mode, is properly a verb in that mode: as, in the example, let him love, the meaning is permit, or ſuffer him to love: let, therefore, ſeems to be a verb of the imperative, and love, of the infinite mode, the ſign, to, being underſtood, though not expreſſed.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Preſent Tenſe. Sing. I muſt, may, can, would, could, or ſhould love, thou muſt, mayeſt, canſt, wouldeſt, couldeſt, or ſhouldeſt love, he muſt, may, can, would, could, or ſhould love. Plu. We muſt, may, can, would, could, or ſhould love, ye, &c.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I muſt, might, would, could, or ſhould have loved thou muſt, mighteſt, wouldeſt, couldeſt, or ſhouldeſt have loved, he muſt, might, would, could, or ſhould have loved. Plu. We muſt, might, would, could, or ſhould have loved, ye, &c.

The pluperfect tenſe, in this mode, is beſt expreſſed by the perfect: as, I might have loved her before the time you mention.

The future tenſe, of moſt verbs, in this mode, is beſt expreſſed by the preſent: as, I may love to-morrow.

There is a ſubjunctive or conditional form which drops the perſonal terminations in certain tenſes of this mode: as, though thou love, though he love.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Preſent tenſe, to love; perfect, to have loved; future, about to love.

THE DECLENSION OF THE NEUTER VERB.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Preſent Tenſe. Sing. I am, thou art, he is. Plu. We are, ye are, they are.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I was, thou waſt, he was. Plu. We were, ye were, they were.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I have been, thou haſt been, he hath, or has been. Plu. We have been, ye have been, they have been.

Pluperfect Tenſe. Sing. I had been, thou hadſt been, he had been. Plu. We had been, ye had been, they had been.

Future Tenſe. Sing. I ſhall or will be, thou ſhalt or wilt be, he ſhall or will be. Plu. We ſhall or will be, ye ſhall or will be, &c.

Second Future. Sing. I ſhall or will have been, &c.

IMPERATIVE MODE.

Sing. Be, do thou be, or, be thou. Plu. Be, do ye be, or, be ye.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Preſent Tenſe. Sing. I muſt, may, can, would, could, or ſhould be, thou muſt, mayeſt, canſt, wouldeſt, couldeſt, or ſhouldeſt be. Plu. We muſt, may, can, would, could, or ſhould be, ye, &c.

Perfect and pluperfect tenſes. Sing. I muſt, might, would, could, or ſhould have been, thou muſt, mighteſt, wouldeſt, couldeſt, or ſhouldeſt have been, he muſt, might, would, could, or ſhould have been. Plu. We muſt, might, would, could, or ſhould have been, ye, &c.

The future tenſe, in this mode, is beſt expreſſed by the preſent: as, I may be to-morrow.

The ſubjunctive form of this verb, is thus diſtinguiſhed:

Preſent Tenſe. Sing. Though I be, though thou be, though he be. Plu. Though we be, though ye be, though they be.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. Though I were, though thou wert, though he were. Plu. Though we were, though ye were, though they were.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Preſent, to be; perfect, to have been; future, about to be.

When the termination of the preter tenſe is not formed by adding d, or ed, to the firſt perſon of the preſent tenſe ſingular, the verb may be called irregular; but that irregularity being diſcovered and obſerved in the preter tenſes, the verb is declined, in all other reſpects, as the regular verb.

The moſt common irregularity is when the d or ed, for better ſound's ſake, is changed into t; and this is, for the moſt part, the caſe, when the verb itſelf ends in f, p, and x: as, puft, wrapt, and mixt; for puffed, wrapped, and mixed, &c.

NOTE. The ſame irregularity, or contraction, frequently occurs in verbs of other terminations.

THE DECLENSION OF IRREGULAR AND DEFECTIVE VERBS.

To write.

Preſent Write Preter Wrote Parti. Written.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I wrote or did write, thou wroteſt or didſt write, he wrote or did write. Plu. We wrote or did write, ye wrote or did write, they wrote or did write.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I have wrote or have written, thou haſt wrote or haſt written, he hath or has wrote, or hath or has written. Plu. We have wrote or have written, ye have wrote or have written, they have wrote or have written.

Pluperfect Tenſe. Sing. I had wrote or had written, thou hadſt wrote or hadſt written, he had wrote or had written. Plu. We had wrote or had written, ye had wrote or had written, they had wrote or had written.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tenſe. To have wrote or have written.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect and pluperfect tenſes. Sing. I might have wrote or written, thou mighteſt have wrote or written, he might have wrote or written. Plu. We might have wrote or written, ye might have wrote or written, they might have wrote or written.

The other modes and tenſes follow the regular form.

To ſee.

Preſent See Preter Saw Parti. Seen.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I ſaw or did ſee, thou ſaweſt or didſt ſee, he ſaw or did ſee. Plu. We ſaw or did ſee, ye ſaw or did ſee, they ſaw or did ſee.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I have ſeen, thou haſt ſeen, he hath or has ſeen. Plu. We have ſeen, ye have ſeen, they have ſeen.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect and pluperfect tenſes. Sing. I might have ſeen, thou mighteſt have ſeen, he might have ſeen. Plu. We might have ſeen, ye might have ſeen, they might have ſeen.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tenſe. To have ſeen.

This is one of thoſe verbs in which the perfect tenſes muſt be expreſſed by the participial form: and which, I think, is always the caſe when that form conſiſts but of one ſyllable.

To go.

Preſent Go. Preter Went. Parti. Form. Gone.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I went or did go, thou wenteſt or didſt go, he went or did go. Plu. We went or did go, ye went or did go, they went or did go.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I have gone, thou haſt gone, he hath or has gone. Plu. We have gone, ye have gone they have gone.

Pluperfect Tenſe. Sing. I had gone, thou hadſt gone, ye had gone. Plu. We had gone, ye had gone, they had gone.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I might have gone, thou mighteſt have gone, he might have gone. Plu. We might have gone, ye might have gone, they might have gone.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tenſe. To have gone.

The participial form of this verb is often joined to the neuter verb, when it refers to the mere circumſtance or event of going; as, " he is juſt gone: he has been gone ſome time." The ſame thing may be obſerved of the verb, to come.

To ſhine.

Preſent Shine. Preter Shone. Parti. Form. Shined.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I ſhone or did ſhine, thou didſt ſhine, he ſhone or did ſhine. Plu. We ſhone or did ſhine, ye ſhone or did ſhine, they ſhone or did ſhine.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I have ſhone or have ſhined, thou haſt ſhone or haſt ſhined, he hath or has has ſhone or hath or has ſhined. Plu. We have ſhone or have ſhined, ye have ſhone or have ſhined, they have ſhone or have ſhined.

Pluperfect Tenſe. Sing. I had ſhone or had ſhined, thou hadſt ſhone or had ſhined, he had ſhone or had ſhined. Plu. We had ſhone or had ſhined, ye had ſhone or had ſhined, they had ſhone or had ſhined.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I might have ſhone or ſhined, thou mighteſt have ſhone or ſhined, he might have ſhone or ſhined. Plu. We might have ſhined, &c.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tenſe. To have ſhone or to have ſhined.

Though this verb has, properly ſpeaking, no paſſive participle, yet it has a participial form as above, which is uſed in the perfect tenſes, and in this it agrees with other verbs of the ſame claſs.

To let.

(Signifying to permit or ſuffer.)

Preſent Let. Preter Let.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Preſent Tenſe. Sing. I let, thou letteſt, he letteth or lets. Plu. We let, ye let, they let.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I did let, thou didſt let, he did let. Plu. We did let, ye did let, they did let.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I have let, thou haſt let, he hath or has let. Plu. We have let, ye have let, they have let.

Pluperfect Tenſe. Sing. I had let, thou hadſt let, he had let. Plu. We had let, ye had let, they had let.

Future Tenſe. Sing. I will let, thou wilt let, he will let. Plu. We will let, ye will let, they will let.

IMPERATIVE MODE.

Sing. Let, or do thou let. Plu. Let, or do ye let.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Preſent and future Tenſes. Sing. I may let, thou mayeſt let, he may let. Plu. We may let, ye may let, they may let.

Perfect Tenſe. Sing. I might have let, thou mighteſt have let, he might have let. Plu. We might have let, ye might have let, they might have let.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Pres. To let. Pret. To have let. Fut. About to let.

This ſhews that let is not a ſign of the imperative mode, but a real verb, occaſionally uſed in all modes and tenſes, joined to ſome other verb in the infinitive mode, either expreſſed or underſtood: as, "You will let me do it." "I might have let him go."

Let, ſignifying to let down, &c. may have a paſſive participle: as, "I was let down in a baſket."

To dare.

(Signifying to venture.)

Preſent Dare. Preter Durſt.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Preſent Tenſe. Sing. I dare, thou dareſt, he dareth or dares. Plu. We dare, ye dare, they dare.

Imperfect Tenſe. Sing. I durſt, thou durſt, he durſt. Plu. We durſt, ye durſt, they durſt, or did dare.

Perfect and pluperfect Tenſes. Sing. I durſt have, thou durſt have, he durſt have. Plu. We durſt have, ye durſt have, they durſt have.

Future Tenſe. Sing. I will dare, thou wilt dare, he will dare. Plu. We will dare, ye will dare, they will dare.

Imperatively. Dare to do it.

Interrogatively. Dare you do it?

The verb, ought, is only uſed in the indicative.

Preſent and future Tenſes. Sing. I ought, thou oughteſt, he ought. Plu. We ought, ye ought, they ought.

Preter Tenſe. Sing. I ought to have, thou oughteſt to have, he ought to have. Plu. We ought to have, ye ought to have, they ought to have.

Theſe two laſt defective verbs are uſed only as above, and always joined to another verb, expreſſed or underſtood in the infinitive mode; as, "I durſt have done it." "I dare ſay."

" Some would even dare to die." " I ought to love you." " I ought to have gone thither."

Dare (to provoke) is regular.

Wot (to know) and quoth (to ſay) are very defective.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Preſent Terſe. I wot, they wot, he wotteth, wot ye?

Preter Tenſe. I wiſt, they wiſt, he wiſt, wiſt ye?

Quoth I, quoth he.

Theſe two laſt verbs are ſeldom uſed except in droll ſtyle.

Of a PARTCIPLE.

A participle is derived of a verb, and partakes of the nature both of the verb and the adjective.

Note. The participle, ſo far as it expreſſes the circumſtance of the noun to which it is joined by the neuter verb, has the nature of an adjective: but, as implying the action of ſome agent, it has the nature of the verb.

The paſſive participle ſeems to have been invented more fully to expreſs that influence o dependence which the agent and object of a verb have on each other: as, " John loves Elizabeth or, Elizabeth is loved by John." " The king wrote the letter; or, the letter was written b the king."

Here loved, and written, ſo far as they expreſs the circumſtances of the nouns to which the are joined by the neuter verb may be conſidered as adjectives; but in another view, as they im ply the action or force of ſome agent or compulſive cauſe, they may be conſidered as verbs.

Hence it is that verbs intranſitive, which have no object, can have no paſſive participle; ſom of them have a participial form joined to the neuter verb: as, " The man is fallen." " The ſun i riſen." But as fallen and riſen, have no reference to any agent or compulſive cauſe differen from the ſubject of the verb, ſo they cannot with any propriety be denominated paſſive partici ples: and, notwithſtanding their form, they differ very little, if any thing, from commo adjectives.

The ſame thing may be obſerved of the active participle: as, " The maſter is writing, th horſe is trotting." Here the participle implies both the circumſtance and the action of th noun to which it is joined by the neuter verb, and therefore has the property of a participle But if we uſe the ſame word in a merely deſcriptive ſenſe, as, " The writing maſter; th trotting horſe." It loſes the property of a participle and becomes a mere adjective.

There are two participles pertaining to moſt verbs, the active which always ends in ing, an the paſſive, which for the moſt part ends in ed: as from the verb call, are derived the participle calling, and called. In the formation of the participles, if the verb ends in e, the e is omitted as, love, loving, loved. If it ends in a ſingle conſonant preceded by a ſingle vowel bearing th accent, that conſonant is doubled: as, commit, committing, committed.

The paſſive participle is, for the moſt part, the ſame with the preter, or paſt tenſe of th verb; but in both theſe there are many irregularities; the chief of which may be gathered fro the following catalogue.

Preſent	Preter.	Parti.
Bake	baked	baked, baken
Begin	began	begun

Note. There are a few compound irregular verbs, ſuch as befall, beſpeak, &c. Which, they follow the ſimple form, it was not thought neceſſary to inſert in this catalogue.

There are a few verbs ending in t, and d, that are the ſame in the preſent, preter tenſes, paſſive participle: as, burſt, caſt, coſt, cut, hit, hurt, knit, let, put, read, rent, rid, ſhed, ſhred, ſhut, ſlit, ſplit, ſpread, thruſt.

Here it may be obſerved, that there are two ways of expreſſing the perfect and pluper tenſes in moſt irregular verbs: as, I have wrote, or have written, &c. I had wrote, or written, &c.

Note. In theſe inſtances written is, I think, a real verb, but for diſtinction's ſake call it the participial form; and in all irregular verbs it was heretofore, and, in ſome of them, is ſtill the only form made uſe of in the preter tenſes.

Of an ADVERB.

AN adverb is a part of ſpeech joined to a verb, an adjective, a participle, and ſometimes another adverb, to expreſs the quality or circumſtance of it: as, he reads well, a truly good m he is ſecretly plotting, he writes very correctly.

Some adverbs admit of compariſon: as, often, oftener, ofteneſt; ſoon, ſooner, ſooneſt; and m of them are compared by the other adverbs, much, more, moſt, &c.

Note. Adverbs have relation to time: as, now, then, lately, &c. to place, as here, there, to number: as, once, twice, &c.

Of a CONJUNCTION.

A conjunction is a part of ſpeech that joins words or ſentences together: as, albeit, althou altho', and, becauſe, but, either, elſe, however, if, namely, neither, nor, though, tho', theref thereupon, unleſs, whereas, whereupon, whether, yet. The foregoing are always conjunctions: theſe ſix following are ſometimes adverbs; alſo, as, otherwiſe, ſince, likewiſe, then. Exc and ſave, are ſometimes verbs; for, ſometimes a prepoſition; and that, ſometimes a pronoun.

Of a PREPOSITION.

A prepoſition is a word ſet before nouns, or pronouns, to expreſs the relation of perſons, pla or things to each other: as, he came to, and ſtood before the city.

Prepoſitions uſed in this ſenſe are ſuch as follow. About, above, after, againſt, am amongſt, at, before, behind, below, beneath, between, beyond, by, for, from, in, into, of, off, upon, over, through, to, unto, than, towards, under, with, within, without.

Of an INTERJECTION.

AN interjection is a word that expreſſes any ſudden motion of the mind, tranſported with ſenſation of pleaſure or pain: as, O! Oh! Alas! Lo!

DISSERTATION III.

On the Derivation and Compoſition of Words.

HERE we enter the grand laboratory of the Engliſh language, in which all kinds words are transformed and compounded at pleaſure; the various artiſts diſplay their rious talents; and though now and then we meet with a very uncouth and ill formed prod tion, yet, for the moſt part, we are ſurprized with a new and pleaſing variety in almoſt ev department. To inveſtigate all the modes of tranſmutation and compoſition in the proceſs of t art, which is hardly exceeded in the Greek language itſelf, would be next to impoſſible. few ſtrictures, however, on the materials in general, and the manner in which they are u may not be unacceptable.

THE SAXON MODES.

From the ſubſtantive we form the adjective in ful, as, joy, joyful; faith, faithful. In ſome, tooth, toothſome; game, gameſome. In leſs: as, joy, joyleſs; hope, hopeleſs. In ly and y: man, manly, fault, faulty. In iſh: as, boy, boyiſh, child, childiſh. In like: as, war, warl king, kinglike. In wiſe: as, weather, weatherwiſe; road, roadwiſe. Another ſubſtan in head: as, God, Godhead; maiden, maidenhead. In hood: as, man, manhood; chi childhood. In ſhip: as, clerk, clerkſhip; lord, lordſhip. In dom: as, king, kingdom; du dukedom. In rick and wick, not much uſed; as, biſhop, biſhoprick; bailiff, bailiwick.

One ſubſtantive is joined to another with or without the hyphen, and frequently in the d tinct form, in which caſe the firſt ſubſtantive becomes an adjective, and diſtinguiſhes the q lity of the ſecond: as, ſeaman, horſe-woman, market boat, fiddle ſtick.

Here we may obſerve, when the ſubſtantive is the ſubject, the terminations like, ly and denote a quality like or ſuited to that ſubject: as, lion-like, like a lion, ſuited to a lio womanly, like a woman, ſuited to a woman; fooliſh, like a fool, ſuited to a fool. Ful, ſ denote an exuberance of the quality : as, joyful, full of joy, abounding with joy ; frolic- full of frolics, abounding in frolics ; muſty, full of muſt, abounding with muſt. Leſs es the want, or entire abſence of the quality : as, joyleſs, void of joy, deſtitute of joy. The nation wiſe denotes dexterity : as, way-wiſe, expert in finding the way, dextrous in choo- he path.

e terminations head and hood denote ſtate or condition : as, widowhood, the ſtate or con- of a widow. Ship, rick and wick denote office, juriſdiction and dignity : as, chancellorſhip, the or dignity of a chancellor : biſhoprick, the temporalities of a biſhop, the office of a biſhop: vick, the juriſdiction of a bailiff.

om the adjective we form the ſubſtantive in neſs : as, black, blackneſs ; good, goodneſs ; tall, ſs. Another adjective in ſome, and iſh ; as, full, fulſome ; glad, gladſome : tall, talliſh ; blueiſh. The adverb in ly : as, common, commonly ; joyful, joyfully.

e adjective is frequently put abſolutely and becomes a ſubſtantive : as, “ The public good quires it.” “ The poor muſt be remembered.”

re the termination neſs denotes ſtate or condition : as, blackneſs, the ſtate of being black ; ſs, the ſtate of being tall. Some denotes the quality in a ſmall degree of exceſs: as, blith- more than commonly blith ; gladſome, more than commonly glad. Iſh denotes the quality ſome degree of diminution : as, blackiſh, ſomewhat black ; talliſh, ſomewhat tall, tending o tallneſs.

om the verb we form the ſubſtantive in er : as, make, maker ; help, helper. The paſſive iple for the moſt part in ed : as love, loved ; call, called. The active participle in ing : as, loving ; call, calling.

is frequently prefixed to verbs and participles, and adds ſomething to the intention or force e radical: as, dabble, bedabble ; dizen, bedizen ; ſpattered, beſpattered.

, ſignifying a negation, is prefixed to almoſt all verbs, adjectives and participles ; and ſome- to ſubſtantives : as, ſkilful, unſkilful ; called, uncalled ; meaning, unmeaning ; ſkilfulneſs, fulneſs ; preparedneſs, unpreparedneſs ; maſk, unmaſk ; button, unbutton ; dreſſed, un- d.

ll is prefixed to participles, with, or without the hyphen, and ſometimes in the diſtinct, h, in many caſes, ſeems to be the beſt form : as, done, well done ; affected, well affected ; , well-taken ; accepted, well-accepted : accompliſhed, well accompliſhed ; prepared, well ed.

is prefixed to participles, with, or without the hyphen, and frequently in the diſtinct ; as, minded, ill minded ; adviſed, ill-adviſed : choſen, ill choſen.

lf is prefixed to participles, with, or without the hyphen, and ſometimes in the diſtinct : as, roaſted, half roaſted ; dreſſed, half dreſſed ; formed, half formed ; ground, half d.

, ſignifying repetition or return, is prefixed to ſubſtantives, verbs and participles ; as, ad- on, readmiſſion ; print, eprint ; eſtabliſhed, re-eſtabliſhed.

is prefixed to adjectives and participles ; as, powerful, allpowerful ; ſeeing, allſeeing ; wiſe, e ; rarely to ſubſtantives ; as, conqueror, allconqueror.

The LATIN MODES.

om the ſubſtantive we form the adjective in ous : as, joy, joyous ; beauty, beauteous ; grace, us.

al : as, muſic, muſical ; condition, conditional ; ſpire, ſpiral. In ive : as, ſport, ſportive ; ſs, ſucceſſive ; progreſs, progreſſive. In able : as, ſale, ſaleable : Another ſubſtantive in iſt ; t, artiſt ; humour, humouriſt. In ian : as, muſic, muſician ; phyſic, phyſician. In y : as, cor- ndence, correſpondency ; innocence, innocency ; complacence, complacency.

om the adjective we form the ſubſtantive in ity ; as, prodigal, prodigality ; ſubſtantial, ſub- ality ; ſtable, ſtability. Another adjective in al ; as, politic, political ; paralitic, paralitical ; ic, ſyllabical.

om the verb we form the adjective in able ; as, commend, commendable ; ſuppoſe, ſuppoſe- alter, alterable. In ible ; as, add, addible ; diſſolve, diſſolvible ; compreſs, compreſſible. In as, expreſs, expreſſive ; afflict, afflictive ; elect, elective. In ant and ent : as, comply, com- ; attend, attendant ; diſſolve, diſſolvent ; differ, different. The ſubſtantive in ation : as, , temptation ; exalt, exaltation. In ition ; as, add, addition ; complete, completion ; ſuppoſe, ition. In ance, and ence, as, incumber, incumberance ; perform, performance ; rely, reliance ; defiance ; differ, difference ; concur, concurrence ; exiſt, exiſtence.

TE, ſignifying priority of time, is ſometimes prefixed to ſubſtantives, verbs and participles : hamber, antechamber ; penult, antepenult ; date, antedate ; dated, antedated.

, ſignifying with, is ſometimes prefixed to ſubſtantives, adjectives, verbs and participles : as, er, co-partner ; operation, co-operation ; eternal, co-eternal ; eſſential, co-eſſential ; extend, end ; exiſting, co-exiſting.

N, ſignifying negation, is prefixed to ſubſtantives and adjectives : as, importation, nonim- ion ; exiſtence, nonexiſtence ; conformiſt, nonconformiſt ; organical, nonorganical.

IN, IM and IR, for better ſound ſake, implying a negation or contrariety, are prefixed to ſtantives, adjectives and adverbs: as, congruity, incongruity; poſſibility, impoſſibility; regula irregularity; ſeparable, inſeparable; practicable, impracticable; reproachable, irreproachable; ſibly, inſenſibly; perceptibly, imperceptibly; reproachably, irreproachably.

PRE, or PRÆ, ſignifying priority or eminence, are prefixed to ſubſtantives and adjectives: exiſtence, preexiſtence; eminent, preeminent; conceived, preconceived.

COUNTER, ſignifying oppoſition, is prefixed to ſubſtantives, verbs and participles: as, p ject, counterproject; balance, counterbalance; marked, countermarked.

THE GREEK MODES.

From the ſubſtantive we form the verb in ize, as, philoſophy, philoſophize; epitome, epitom harmony, harmonize; author, authorize. Another ſubſtantive in iſm; as, catholic, catholic Arminian, Arminianiſm; Calvin, Calviniſm; Spinoſa, Spinoſiſm.

From the verb we form the ſubſtantive in ſm: as, baptize, baptiſm; ſyllog ſyllogiſm.

ANTI, ſignifying contrariety, or oppoſition, is prefixed to ſubſtantives and adjectives, courtier, anticourtier; miniſterial, antiminiſterial; chriſtian, antichriſtian; aſthmatic, tiaſthmatic.

THE FRENCH MODES.

From the ſubſtantive we form another ſubſtantive in age: as, pound, poundage; pack, pack perſon, perſonage; patron, patronage.

From the verb we form the ſubſtantive in ment; as, reſent, reſentment; conceal, concealm content, contentment; command, commandment.

MIS, implying error or deceit, is prefixed to ſubſtantives, verbs and participles: as, app tion, miſapplication; management, miſmanagement; apply, miſapply; conducted, miſcondu

DIS, implying negation or contrariety, is prefixed to ſubſtantives, verbs and participles: ſatisfaction, diſſatisfaction; credit, diſcredit; charge, diſcharge: poſſeſs, diſpoſſeſs; claim, claim; approved, diſapproved.

Beſides all theſe, there is, in the Engliſh language, another mode of combination, in w the verb is connected with the adverb, and requires a ſenſe ſomewhat different from the fi form: as, to call in, to call out, to call on; to caſt off, to caſt out, to caſt up; to paſs by, to on, to paſs over.

Though the compound and derivative words in the Engliſh language retain, for the part, the general ſenſe or intention of the radicals out of which they are formed, yet ſome they convey a very different meaning. For inſtance, ſucceſs, and ſucceſſion imply very diff ideas; ſo do expoſe, and expoſition.

As the modes of combination are ſo numerous and comprehenſive, it is no wonder ou guage ſhould afford ſome inſtances of injudicious management in this art. Care ſhould be t that we do not indulge too much to the itch of novelty, or to the more preſſing calls of niency on urgent occaſions. It may ſometimes be much eaſier to coin a new word than collect a proper and eſtabliſhed phraſeology to expreſs our ideas; and hence it is, perhaps, diſlikeneſs, circuity, mechaniſt, ſtultify, and many others, notwithſtanding the authority of names, will hardly ever acquire an eſtabliſhed reputation or general currency in the Engliſh guage.

DISSERTATION IV.

On SYNTAX.

SYNTAX includes the order, the connection, and the agreement of words ſentence.

If this ſhort definition be juſt, the affected negligence and brevity with which the write Engliſh grammar have generally treated this ſubject, muſt have been owing to more common inattention. Surely it will be allowed, by all who give themſelves time to think much of the propriety, beauty, and perſpicuity of language depends on a due obſervation rules of Syntax *.

The articles, a, and an, are uſed only before nouns of the ſingular number, and before a wo begins with a vowel; a before a word that begins with a conſonant; an, or, a, before a word begins with h: as, "a Chriſtian, an infidel, an heathen, or a heathen." But if the h be not ſ then the article, an, is only uſed: as, "an hour, an herb. A and an are indefinite: a man, a houſe." i. e. any man, any houſe, without diſtinction. But the is definite: as, " man, the houſe." i. e. ſome one man, ſome one houſe in particular. The is likewiſe

* The truth of this remark is ſufficiently illuſtrated in the many awkward modes of conſtruction ado a writer of the firſt eminence in the republic of letters.

Hume. See Dr. Prieſtly's G

guiſh two or more perſons or things mentioned before: as, “ The men.” (not the wo-.) “ The Lords.” (as diſtinguiſhed from the Commons.)

hen two nouns come together with the prepoſition of between them, denoting poſſeſſion, the r may be made the genitive caſe, and ſet before the other: as, “ The property of the men.” men's property.

ouns of the plural number that end in s, will not very properly admit this genitive caſe. he Common's houſe.”

he adjective is uſually ſet before its ſubſtantive: as, “ The ſecond year, a good man.” But uently, for better ſound's ſake, eſpecially in poetry, the adjective comes after its ſub-ive: as, hen thing, or things, is ſubſtantive to an adjective, the word thing, or things, is elegantly tted, and the adjective is put abſolutely, or without its ſubſtantive: as, “ Who will ſhew us good?” for, who will ſhew us any good thing? In many other caſes, the adjective is put utely, eſpecially when the noun has been mentioned before, and is eaſily underſtood, though expreſſed.

n forming the degrees of compariſon, the adverbs, more, moſt, leſs, leaſt, &c. are only uſed re the adjective when the terminations er and eſt are omitted: as, “ more full, leſs beau-.” For better ſound's ſake moſt adjectives ending in ive, at, ful, able, ing, ous, iſh, cut, , ible, and ſome others, muſt be compared by the adverbs, more, moſt, leaſt, &c. as, penſive, penſive; ſubſtantial, more ſubſtantial. Adjectives of more than one ſyllable generally come er this rule.

he pronouns muſt always agree with the nouns for which they ſtand, or to which they refer umber, perſon, and gender: as, “ The ſun ſhines and his race is appointed to him: the moon ppears, and ſhe ſhines with light, but not her own: the ſea ſwells, it roars, and what can repel s force?”

he neuter pronoun, by an idiom peculiar to the Engliſh language, is frequently joined in ex-atory ſentences, with a noun or pronoun of the maſculine or feminine gender: as, “ It is I. as the man that did it.” Though this ſeems to be an indefinite uſe of the neuter pronoun xpreſſive of ſome cauſe or ſubject of enquiry without any reſpect to perſon or gender, yet, in t propriety, it cannot be ſo uſed with a noun of the plural number: for inſtance, “ It was that did it.”

here two or more nouns or pronouns of the ſingular number are joined together in a ſen-e, the pronoun which refers to them muſt be in the plural number: as, “ The king and e queen had put on their robes.”

hen two or more nouns or pronouns of different perſons, are joined in a ſentence, the pro-n which refers to them muſt agree with the firſt perſon in preference to the ſecond, and with ſecond in preference to the third: as, “ Thou and thy father are both in the ſame fault, and ought to confeſs it. The captain and I fought on the ſame ground, we divided the ſpoil and ared it between us.”

he genitive caſe of a pronoun is always uſed when joined to a noun to denote property or poſ-n: as, “ My head and thy hand.” The head of me and the hand of thee are inelegant ex-ſions.

he genitive caſes of the pronouns, viz. my, thy, &c. are uſed when joined with nouns; but , thine, &c. when put abſolutely or without their nouns: as, “ It is my book,” or, omit- the noun, “ It is mine.” The ſame thing may be obſerved of other and others, in the plural nber: as, “ The property of other men;” or, without the noun, “ The property of thers.”

he pronominal adjectives are only uſed in the genitive caſe when put abſolutely: as, “ I will not o it for tens ſake.”

ine, and thine, are frequently put for my and thy, before a word that begins with a vowel: “ Mine eye for my eye.”

hen two perſons, or things, are ſpoken of in a ſentence, and there is occaſion to mention n over again, for the ſake of diſtinction, that is uſed when it refers to the former, and this n it refers to the latter: as,

> “ Self love, the ſpring of motion, acts the ſoul;
> “ Reaſon's comparing balance rules the whole;
> “ Man but for that no action could attend,
> “ And but for this were active to no end.”

he relative, who, or whom, is uſed when it refers to perſons; which, when it refers to s: as, “ I am bound to reſpect a man, who has done me a favour; though he be chargeable ith vices, which I hate.”

hat refers both to perſons and things: as, “ The man that I reſpect; the thing that I want, is ot here.”

Who, what. and which, are uſed in aſking queſtions: who, when we enquire for a man' name: as, " Who is that man?" what, when we would know his occupation, &c. as, " Wha is that man?" which, when we want to diſtinguiſh one of two or more perſons or things; as, " Which of the men; which of the roads will you chuſe?"

The verb agrees with its noun, or pronoun, i. e. with its agent, or ſubject, in number and perſon: as, " The boy writes, I love, he who reads."

NOTE. This agent, or ſubject, is always found by aſking the queſtion who, or what, on the verb; as, who write? The anſwer to the queſtion is, boys, which word is the agent of the verb, write,

In the complaiſant ſtile, it is common to uſe you, inſtead of thou, when we ſpeak to one perſon only; and, in that caſe, it has a plural verb joined with it: as, " You are my brother."

A noun of multitude, of the ſingular number, may have a verb, either ſingular, or plural: as, " The people is mad," or, " The people are mad." The latter ſeems to be more elegant.

When two nouns, or pronouns, are connected together in a ſentence, as joint agents, or ſubjects, they muſt have a plural verb, though they ſhould be both of the ſingular number: as, " The man and his wife are happy."

When the neuter verb ſtands between two nouns, or pronouns, one of the ſingular, and the other of the plural number, it may beſt agree with that which immediately goes before it: as, " All " things were ſea; the whole ſum is twenty-four pounds."

Sometimes a ſentence, or an infinitive, is the ſubject of a verb, in which caſe, the verb muſt be put in the ſingular number, and third perſon: as, " To ſee the ſun is pleaſant."

The pronouns, I, we, thou, ye, he, ſhe, they, and who, being the nominative caſe, are always uſed when they ſtand as the agent of an active, or the ſubject of the neuter verb: as, " I ſee, he loves, we are, they are."

The agent, or ſubject, is moſt commonly ſet immediately before the verb, or the ſign of the verb: as, " The man lives: the city has ſtood a thouſand years:" but in the imperative mode it is ſe after the verb: as, " Love thou; be thou happy:" in like manner, when a queſtion is aſked, it is ſet after the verb, or between the ſign and the verb: as, " Are you there? doth the king live?"

The accuſative caſe of a pronoun is always uſed when it receives the force or impreſſion of the active verb, or the active participle: as, " He calls me, ſhe is beating them."

When the agent and object of a verb are not diſtinguiſhed (as in nouns) by different caſes, the agent is always ſet before, and the object after the verb, this being the natural order and neceſſar to determine the ſenſe: as, " Alexander conquered Darius." If Darius had been the conqueror it is plain the order of the nouns muſt have been inverted.

The accuſative caſe of a pronoun is always ſet after prepoſitions: as, " To me, for them, &c."

After verbs of ſhewing, giving, &c. the prepoſition, to, is elegantly omitted before the pronoun, which notwithſtanding muſt be in the accuſative: as, " I give him the book; for, " give to him the book."

The Interjections, O, oh, and ah, require the accuſative caſe of a pronoun in the firſt perſon: as, " O me, oh me, ah me." But the nominative in the ſecond: as, " O thou, O ye."

Than is only uſed in compariſon, and takes the ſame caſe after that goes before it: as, " He greater than I; ſhe loves him better than me."

The noun, or pronoun, which receives the force of the active verb, is moſt commonly ſet aft the verb: as, " I love the man." But the relative, whom, is always ſet before the verb: as, " The man whom I love, is abſent."

The auxiliary ſigns, do, and did, and their inflections, doſt, doth, or does, and didſt, ought be uſed only for the ſake of emphaſis: as, " I do love; he doth love."

Shall is uſed in the firſt perſon barely to expreſs the future action or event: as, " I ſha do it:" but, in the ſecond and third it promiſes, or commands: as, " You ſhall do it." On the contrary, will, in the ſecond and third perſons, barely expreſſes the future action or event: as " You will do it:" but, in the firſt, it promiſes, or threatens: as, " I will do it."

The terminations, eth, ed, and the participial form of the verb are uſed in the grave and formal; but s, 'd, and the form of the paſt tenſe, in the free and familiar ſtyle: as, (gravely) " H hath loved. The man hath ſpoken and ſtill ſpeaketh." (familiarly) " He has loved. The ma has ſpoke and ſtill ſpeaks."

The paſſive participle, and not the paſt tenſe, ſhould be always uſed when joined in a ſentenc with the neuter verb; as, " It was written (not it was wrote) in Hebrew."

That form of the tenſes in verbs, which is diſtinguiſhed by the active participle, is uſed wit ſtrict propriety, when we would expreſs the continuance of an action: as, " I have been writing long time. I ſhall be writing all the week."

The adverb is always placed immediately before the adjective; but moſt frequently after the verb as, " A very pious man prays frequently."

The conjunctions if, though, except, &c. implying a manifeſt doubt or uncertainty, require the ſubjunctive form of the verb: as, " Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. I will not l " thee go except thou bleſs me. Kiſs the Son leſt he be angry. If he but ſpeak the word. S " thou do it not."

NOT

NOTE. This form ſeems to be elliptical, and may be thus reſolved. "Though he ſhould ſlay me. Leſt he ſhould be angry. See thou muſt do it not."

The prepoſition, to, is always uſed before nouns of place, after verbs and participles of motion : , "I went to London ; I am going to town, &c." But the prepoſition, at, is always uſed hen it follows the neuter verb in the ſame caſe : as, "I have been at London. I am at the place appointed." We likewiſe ſay, "He touched at any place ; he arrived at ; he lives at," &c.

The prepoſition, in, is ſet before countries, cities, and large towns, eſpecially if they are in the me nation : as, "He lives in London, in France, &c." At is ſet before villages, ſingle houſes, d cities, if they are in diſtant countries : as, "He lives at Hackney," &c.

No preciſe rules can be given for the order or placing of all words in a ſentence. The euphony d perſpicuity of the expreſſion are the two things which ought to be chiefly regarded.

The Conſtruction of the PREPOSITIONS with the other Parts of Speech.

Words denoting property or poſſeſſion, and ſuch as ſignify the part of a whole, are conſtructed ith of: as, "Poſſeſſed of wealth. "Seized of a large eſtate." "Diſſeized of their ancient atrimony." "The light of the eyes." "The ſhape of the body." "The prerogative of the ing." "The privilege of the ſubject." "One of the men." "Some of the company." A member of the houſe." "The foot of the hill." "The extent of the plain."

Words which denote any affection of the mind are conſtructed with of, to, unto and for before e object of that affection : as, "A real love to mankind." "An inveterate hatred to the fair x." "A ſincere affection for his aunt." "The love of man." "The love of God." But hen the ſubject and object of the affection happen to be reciprocal, or may take place of ch other, of is not ſo proper, at leaſt not ſo determinate, as to and for. The love of God ay intend either the love which God has for us, or the love we have to him, and is therefore itſelf an ambiguous expreſſion. But, when this reciprocation cannot take place, it is a matter indifference, as to the ſenſe, whether we uſe of, to, or for : as, "The love of the world." The love of money." "A love of virtue." "A love to virtue."

Words denoting inclination or deſire, and the contrary, are conſtructed with after, for, of, to, to, and towards : as, "He had a great deſire after it." "She was diſpoſed for a huſband." Covetous of gain." "Deſirous of vain glory." "Diſinclined to marriage." "Indiſpoſed to mpliance." "Diſaffected to the king." "Averſe to all innovations." "An averſion to ſubction." "Diſaffection towards the whigs." "Inclined towards London."

Words denoting approbation or diſapprobation are conſtructed with of : as, "She diſapproved of e meaſure." "They could not approve of it."

Words ſignifying oppoſition or contrariety are conſtructed with to or unto : as, "Oppoſite to virtue." Contrary to common ſenſe."

Words denoting complacency or diſplacency are conſtructed with at and with : as, "The king as diſpleaſed at it." "She was greatly entertained with his converſation."

Words denoting intercourſe, agreement, or compliance, and the contrary, are conſtructed with with d between ; as, "He made a covenant with the people." "An agreement between them." She held ſociety with mortals." "I will comply with your requeſt."

Words denoting compariſon, likeneſs, or unlikeneſs, are conſtructed with to and with : as, "What vice when compared with virtue." "Like unto me.' "Similar to this." "I will liken him a wiſe man."

Words denoting gift or diſtribution are conſtructed with to or from : as, "A diſtribution to any." "I give to you." "It was given from one to another."

Words which denote receiving are conſtructed with of or from ; as, "I received it of him." She took it from them."

Words which ſignify ſubmiſſion or obedience are conſtructed with to ; as, "A ſubmiſſion to ordinces." "A ſubjection to the laws." "To ſubmit to order." "Obedience to parents." "He mitted to the conqueror."

Words ſignifying truſt or dependence are conſtructed with in, to, on and upon, before the object : "I will truſt to you." "I place confidence in that man." "He truſted in God." "I dend on your word." "She relied on that promiſe."

Words denoting a declaration, exhibition, or recommendation are conſtructed with to, before the rſon to whom the declaration is made : as, "She declared it to me." "It was repreſented to e king." "He ſhewed him to the people." "He was much recommended to his lordſhip."

Words denoting plenty or want are conſtructed with of, in and with ; as, "Full of wine." Void of truth." "Empty of air." "Deſtitute of honour." "Deprived of all." "Plenteous mercy." "Rich in goods." "Abounding with corn."

Words denoting fitneſs or unfitneſs, advantage or diſadvantage, are conſtructed with to or for : "Fitted to the perſon." "Fit for children." "Advantageous to commerce." "Favourle to population." "Profitable to all." "Unprofitable to many." "Better for you." "Worſe them."

Words ſignifying accuſation or acquittal are conſtructed with of before the crime: as, “ She wa accuſed of incontinency.” “ He was acquitted of perjury.”

Words which imply blame or cenſure, praiſe or diſpraiſe, are conſtructed with for : as, “ Sh was indicted for perjury.” “ Admired for beauty.” “ Careſſed for her ſinging.” “ Cenſured fo lying.” “ Praiſed for her conſtancy.”

Participles or words ſhewing any thing made, done, or to be done, are conſtructed with by o with, reſpecting the agent or inſtrument : as, “ The writing was ſigned by the king.” “ It wa written with the point of a diamond.” With of or from, reſpecting the material: as, “ I was made of wood.” “ It was formed from the ſtump of a tree.” With in or at, reſpectin the place: as, “ It was made at Worceſter.” It was done in London.” With to or for, reſpecting the intention: as, “ It was made for ſale.” “ It was formed to the hand.”

Words of motion and reſt are conſtructed in different circumſtances with almoſt all the prepoſitions in the Engliſh language. About and round denote a circular or a kind of uncertain motio or poſition: as, “ They went round the church.” “ He goes about the country.” “ The went round the town.” “ They ſtood about the door,” “ He lives ſomewhere about Uxbridge.” Above and over denote a more elevated direction or ſtation: as, “ The ſhot went above the mark.” “ The arrow flew over their heads.” “ They dwelt above the bridge,” “ He lodged over th gate.” After denotes a purſuit or poſteriour motion: as, “ This body march after the ſecon battalion.” “ They all ran after the thief.” Againſt denotes a hoſtile motion, or a poſitio in contact with ſome other body: as, “ He marched againſt the city with a vaſt army.” “ H ſtood againſt the wall.” Among, amongſt, and with denote a motion or poſition in company o ſurrounded by others: as, “ They went among the reſt.” “ He dwelt among the Sidonians.” “ They go with the multitude.” “ It will abide with you.” At denotes the place of reſt, an a violent or hoſtile motion: as, “ He ſtood at the door.” “ She flew at him.” Before denote an appearance in preſence of a ſuperior, and a precedency of motion or ſituation: as, “ H ſtood before the king.” “ She went before a magiſtrate.” “ She ſtood before all the company.” Below, beneath and under denote an inferior direction or poſition: as, “ They went below th town.” “ They paſſed under the gate.” “ They ſtood beneath the mountain.” Between denotes a middle direction or ſtation: as, “ They paſſed between the ranks.” “ He ſtood between them.” Beyond denotes a ſtation at ſome further diſtance: as, “ The arrow flew beyon the mark.” “ He dwelt beyond the town.” By and in denote nearneſs of ſituation and th means or inſtrument of conveyance: as, “ He went by the houſe.” “ She ſtood by the pillar.” “ It went by the poſt.” “ She came in the coach.” For denotes the deſign: as, “ They we for pleaſure.” “ They run for a wager.” From denotes the place or point from which motion commences: as, “ They came from London.” “ They went from Worceſter.” Into denotes entrance: as, “ He came into the houſe.” “ He entered eaſily into the ſubject.” Thoug denotes perſeverance, or motion continued from one extreme to the other: as, “ He paſſ through the town.” “ She ran through all the particulars of the ſtory.” To and unto denote th place or point to which the motion is directed: as, “ He came to London.” “ He rode fro London to York.”

Some late writers ſeem to have made it a rule to ſubjoin to compound words from the Lati the prepoſitions with which they are compounded, or thoſe which anſwer to them in the Engliſh. But this rule cannot be reduced to general practice; and ſome inſtances in which it ha ben applied ſeem to be inconſiſtent with the idiom of the Engliſh language. “ Averſe fro Venus.” “ Averſe from God.” “ Was totally dependent of.” “ Conformable with.” “ Inform in ſome parts of their character.”

Theſe few ſtrictures, on this very difficult part of Grammar, cannot be ſuppoſed adequate t the various caſes that may ariſe, or to the inſtruction which the ſubject requires. They ar rather intended as hints to remind us of our danger, and to make us more cautious in the uſ of thoſe words which have been ſo often miſapplied by ſome of our beſt writers.

DISSERTATION V.

On the ELLIPSIS.

ELLIPSIS, as applied to grammar, is the omiſſion of a word or part of a ſentence, whic muſt be ſupplied or underſtood to complete the ſenſe, or make out the conſtruction. Th chief deſign of Ellipſis is to avoid diſagreeable repetitions, as well as to expreſs our ideas in a few words and in as pleaſing a manner as poſſible. To the proper uſe of this figure we ow much of the clearneſs and perſpicuity of the Engliſh language. The ſtyle of the law is th leaſt elliptical, but at the ſame time the moſt obſcure and perplexed of any in preſent uſe. Th frequent tautologies and the immoderate length of the periods require a cloſeneſs of attention an facility of connection unknown to common readers: and hence it is that the deſign of a de ſtrument, which may take up half an hour in rehearſal, is generally better underſtood in r three ſhort and expreſſive ſentences *.

t though the Engliſh language owes much of its perſpicuity to the proper uſe of the Ellipſis, n improper or immoderate uſe of it, may induce a manifeſt obſcurity. Extremes therefore his, as well as in every thing elſe, ſhould be carefully avoided.

moſt all compound ſentences are more or leſs elliptical; and any kind of word in the Eng- anguage, unleſs we except the interjection, may be elegantly ſuppreſſed by the proper appli- n of this figure.

The ELLIPSIS of the ARTICLE.

A man, woman, and child." i. e. A man, a woman, and a child. " A father and ſon. The and moon. The day and hour."

all which inſtances the article being once mentioned, the repetition of it, unleſs ſome pe- r emphaſis requires it, would be unneceſſary.

Not only the year, but the day, and the hour." In this caſe the Ellipſis of the laſt article ld be rather improper.

The ELLIPSIS of the NOUN.

A learned, wiſe, and good man." i. e. A learned man, a wiſe man, and a good man. " A dent and faithful wife. The laws of God and man. The ſafety and happineſs of the ." In ſome very emphatical expreſſions the Ellipſis ſhould not be admitted; as, " Chriſt power of God, and the wiſdom of God." " At Saint Jameſes. By Saint Pauls." e we have a noun in the genitive caſe and no word in the ſentence to govern it; the Ellip- uſt therefore be ſupplied to make out the conſtruction: and yet in common converſation at , it is much better to ſay, " I went by Saint Pauls:" than, " I went by Saint Paul's Church."

The ELLIPSIS of the ADJECTIVE.

A delightful orchard and garden." i. e. " A delightful orchard and a delightful garden. " A e man and woman. Great wealth and power." In ſuch elliptical expreſſions, the adjec- ought to have exactly the ſame ſignification, and to be quite as proper, when joined to the r, as to the former ſubſtantives; otherwiſe the Ellipſis ſhould not be admitted.

or ſhould we, I think, apply this Ellipſis of the adjective to nouns of different numbers. magnificent houſe and gardens." Better uſe another word, " A magnificent houſe and fine dens." " A tall man and a woman." In this ſentence there is no Ellipſis: the adjective uality reſpects only the man.

The ELLIPSIS of the PRONOUN.

" I love and fear him. i. e." I love him, and I fear him. " My houſe and lands. Thy learn- and wiſdom. His wife and daughter. Her lord and maſter." In all theſe inſtances the pſis may be introduced with propriety: but if we would be more expreſs and emphatical, it ſt not be admitted. " My Lord and my God. My ſons and my daughters." " This is the they hate. Theſe are the goods they bought. Are theſe the gods they worſhip? Is the woman you ſaw?" In ſuch common forms of ſpeech the relative pronoun is uſually tted: though for the moſt part, eſpecially in complex ſentences, it is much better to have it reſſed.

" In the poſture I lay." " In the way I went." " The horſe I rode fell down." Better ſay, e poſture in which I lay. The horſe on which I rode fell down.

The antecedent and the relative connect the parts of a ſentence together, and ſhould, to pre- t confuſion and obſcurity, anſwer to each other with great exactneſs. " We ſpeak that do know, and teſtify that we have ſeen." The Ellipſis in ſuch inſtances, is manifeſtly proper: let it therefore be ſupplied. " We ſpeak that which we do know, and teſtify that ich we have ſeen."

The relative, what, in the neuter gender, ſeems to include both the antecedent and the re- ive. " This is what you ſpeak of. i. e. The thing which you ſpeak of."

The ELLIPSIS of the VERB.

" The man was old and crafty." i. e. The man was old, and the man was crafty. " She s young and rich and beautiful. Thou art poor and wretched, and miſerable, and blind and ked." But if we would, in ſuch enumerations, point out one property above the reſt, let that perty be put laſt, and the Ellipſis ſupplied. " She is young and beautiful, and ſhe is rich." I recommended the father and ſon. We ſaw the town and country. He rewarded the women and

This can be no reflection on the gentlemen of the law, as it is well known that many of them poſſeſs the vers of elocution in an eminent degree; and that one, who now fills a diſtinguiſhed ſtation in that depart- nt, has favoured us with the ſpirit of the laws in a ſtyle as pure and claſſical, as his comments upon them are and deciſive.

and children.” “ You ought to love and ſerve him. I deſire to hear and learn. He went “ ſee and hear.” i. e. He went to ſee, and he went to hear. In which laſt inſtances, there is only an Ellipſis of the governing verb, but likewiſe of the ſign of the infinitive mode which governed by it.

And here it may not be amiſs to obſerve, that ſome verbs, through cuſtom at leaſt, ſeem require the Ellipſis of this ſign. “ I bid you riſe and go. He made me go and do it. I be “ him curſe and ſwear. I ſaw her go that way. You need not ſpeak. Would you have “ call ?” In all which inſtances the ſign of the infinitive mode would be improper.

The ELLIPSIS of the Adverb, Prepoſition, Conjunction, and Interjection.

“ He ſpake and acted wiſely. They ſing and play moſt delightfully. She ſoon found and “ knowledged her miſtake. Thrice I went and offered my ſervice.” That is, Thrice I we and thrice I offered my ſervice.

“ They confeſs the power, wiſdom, goodneſs, and love of their Creator.” i. e. The powe and wiſdom, and goodneſs, and love. “ May I ſpeak of power, wiſdom, goodneſs, truth The entire Ellipſis of the conjunction, as in the laſt inſtance, occurs but ſeldom : in ſome p ticular caſes, however, it may have its propriety.

“ Though I love I do not adore him. Though he went up he could ſee nothing. i. Though I love him, yet I do not adore him. “ I deſire you would come to me. He ſa “ he would do it.” i. e. He ſaid that he would do it. Theſe conjunctions may be ſom times omitted : but for the moſt part, it is much better to expreſs them.

There are ſeveral pairs of correſpondent conjunctions, or ſuch as anſwer to each other in the co ſtruction of a ſentence, which ſhould be carefully obſerved, and perhaps never ſuppreſſed. Th anſwering to ſo. “ It is ſo obvious that I need not mention it.” As anſwering to ſo. “ T city of Briſtol is not near ſo large as that of London.” So anſwering to as. “ As is the prieſt are the people.” As anſwering to as. “ She is as tall as you.” Nor anſwering to neithe “ Neither the one, nor the other.” Or anſwering to either. “ Either this man or that man. Or anſwering to whether. “ Whether it were I or you.” Yet anſwering to though or althoug “ Though ſhe was young yet ſhe was not handſome.”

PREPOSITIONS are often ſuppreſſed.

“ He went into the churches, halls, and public buildings : through the ſtreets and lanes of th city: he ſpake to every gentleman and lady of the place.” i. e. To every gentleman and every lady. “ I did him a kindneſs.” “ He brought me the news.” “ She gave him the le “ ters.” i. e. She gave to him the letters.

The ellipſis of the interjection is not very common.

“ O pity, and ſhame.” Milton.

EXAMPLES of the ELLIPSIS.

“ If good manners will not juſtify my long ſilence, policy at leaſt will : and you muſt con “ feſs, there is ſome prudence in not owning a debt one is incapable of paying.” If goo manners will not juſtify my long ſilence, policy at leaſt will, juſtify it : and you muſt con feſs, that, there is ſome prudence in not owning a debt, which, one is incapable of paying.

Mr. Locke to Mr. Molyneux

A few inſtances in which perhaps all poſſible elliptical words are ſupplied.

“ You muſt renounce the converſation of your friends, and every civil duty of life to b “ concealed in gloomy and unprofitable ſolitude.” You muſt renounce the converſation o your friends, and, you muſt renounce, every civil duty of life, to be concealed in gloomy, ſolitude and you muſt renounce the converſation of your friends, and you muſt renounce every civil duty of life, t be concealed in, unprofitable ſolitude. Fitzoſborn's Letter me ſentences which ſeem to differ from the common forms of conſtruction accounted for he ſuppoſition of Ellipſis.

By preaching repentance. By the preaching of repentance." Both theſe are ſuppoſed to be er and ſynonimous expreſſions, and I cannot but think the former is an Ellipſis of the latter, hich the article and the prepoſition are both ſuppreſſed by cuſtom. By preaching of repent- : and, By the preaching repentance : are both judged to be improper. Theſe ſentences are ly elliptical, and partly not ſo, and from hence the impropriety ſeems to ariſe. Preaching, ither form, is a ſubſtantive, diſtinguiſhed by the ſenſe, and a prepoſition prefixed to it: nor he noun following governed by the ſuppoſed verbal force of the word, preaching, but by the oſition expreſſed or underſtood.

Well is him. Wo is me. Wo unto you." Theſe ſentences are all elliptical, and partly ex- n each other. Well is it for him. Wo is to me. Wo is unto you. To have recourſe to a oſed dative caſe is therefore quite unneceſſary.

My Father is greater than I. She loves him better than me." My Father is greater than I She loves him better than, ſhe loves me. " To let blood. To let down." To let, out, d; or, to let blood, run out. To let, it fall or ſlide, down. " To go a fiſhing. To go a unting." To go a fiſhing voyage. To go on a hunting party. " To walk a mile. To eep all night. To walk through the ſpace of a mile. To ſleep through all the night. " A undred ſheep. A thouſand men." A flock of one hundred ſheep. A company of one thouſand . " That man has a hundred a year." That man has an income of a hundred pounds in a r. " A few men. A great many men." A hundred, a thouſand, few, many, are to be ſidered as collective nouns, and diſtinguiſhed as ſuch, by the ſingular article. A few (i. e. all number) of men. A great many (i. e. a great number) of men. " He is the better or you. The deeper the well, the clearer the water." An article ſeems, for the moſt part, e the ſign of a noun either expreſſed or underſtood; and the above ſentences may be reſolved . He is the better man for you. The deeper well, the well is; the clearer water, the r is.

He deſcending, the doors being ſhut." This is commonly called the caſe or ſtate abſo- , and, in Engliſh, the pronoun muſt be in the nominative. The ſentence ſeems to be ellip- l, and the meaning is, While he was deſcending, while the doors were ſhut. " He came into his world of ours." " I am juſtified in publiſhing any letters of Mr. Locke's." In the firſt heſe inſtances the genitive caſe of the pronoun comes after the prepoſition, but cannot be erned by it, for then it would be the accuſative: it muſt therefore be governed by ſome r word underſtood in the ſentence. He came into this world of our dwelling, habitation, And then omitting the noun it will be, This world of ours, by the common rules of ſtruction. The other ſentence may be explained after the ſame manner. I am juſtified in liſhing any letters of Mr. Locke's writing, correſpondence, &c. i. e. of the writing or corre- dence of Mr. Locke.

he uſe of the genitive caſe in ſuch inſtances ſeems to be a little uncouth. And here nnot but obſerve that though, on ſome occaſions, the genitive has its propriety and ele- ce, yet it ſhould in the general be uſed with caution, and much more ſparingly, perhaps n ſome authors have done.

DISSERTATION VI.

On Accent, Emphaſis, and Quantity.

HE accent and quantity of ſyllables give that diſtinction to words, and that pleaſing modulation to the voice in pronunciation without which the ear would be perpetually uſted with the moſt inſufferable monotony. And hence it is, that in all poliſhed languages, article has been attended to with great exactneſs. The Latins and Greeks diſtinguiſhed all their ſyllables into long and ſhort, and the latter made uſe of no leſs than three di marks or characters to point out the different quantity of accent or elevation of the voice in pronunciation. And I am inclined to think, that if the proper modes of ſpeaking were carefully attended to we ſhould find ſomething ſimilar to this in the Engliſh language. Latins and eſpecially the Greeks might perhaps carry this matter too far, and were w follow them too cloſely we ſhould be in danger of loſing the openneſs and energy of pronun tion in a kind of ſing ſong or unmanly recitative.

Some of our lateſt and perhaps beſt authors have been greatly divided in their opinion this ſubject. One is a ſtrenuous advocate for the unity, others no leſs warmly contend for duplicity and even triplicity of accent on the ſame word. But perhaps a little preciſion go far to reconcile, at leaſt to accommodate the matter between the contending parties.

If by the ſyllabical accent we are to underſtand the ſuperior ſtreſs of the voice on any ſyllable of a word, as all ſeem to allow, the unity is fairly determined; for who will contend two ſuperiors?

This being granted, every word of one ſyllable may be properly called an atonic in the liſh language: it has no room for ſuperiority, and therefore can have no ſyllabical accent. may have an emphaſis in common with other words, but emphaſis and accent are two differ things and muſt not be confounded in pronunciation.

For the ſame reaſon a word of two ſyllables can admit but of one accent, for if both ſyllables be pronounced with preciſely the ſame ſtreſs of voice, the word, in that caſe, no accent at all, nor can it be diſtinguiſhed in pronunciation from two words or two diff monoſyllables. How far this mode of pronunciation may be proper in ſome particular ca will not pretend to determine. The inſtances that have been adduced, earthquake, quickſ ſackcloth, and bailſtone, may perhaps come the neareſt to it; but I am inclined to think even here the firſt ſyllable will claim at leaſt ſome little ſuperiority. In words therefore of ſyllables, where both are peculiarly ſignificant, one may properly bear the ſyllabical acc and the other be pronounced with greater diſtinction than common; and, if this obſerva will hold good in theſe particular inſtances, it will certainly do ſo in all others that ca produced.

Nor does it follow that the ſyllabical accent is always to be placed on the moſt ſignifi ſyllable: the genius and cuſtom, the particular formation and the euphony of language are tainly more prevalent than the mere ſignificancy of a radical ſyllable: nor is the inconvenie of this mode of placing the accent on an inſignificant ſyllable ſo great as may have been i gined, provided the more ſignificant ſyllables be pronounced with proper diſtinctneſs, as generally are by all good ſpeakers. What inconveniency can ariſe from the pronunciatio the following words, ſubſtance, ſubſtantial, conſubſtantial and conſubſtantiality, as uſually and reſ tively accented on the firſt, ſecond, third, and fifth ſyllable? The firſt has nothing but cuſtom, and the laſt perhaps nothing but the euphony of language to ſupport it. Let the labical accent keep its place, and let the ſignificant ſyllables more or fewer be pronounced proper diſtinctneſs, and I think we have all that is in fact contended for by the writers on ſubject, and all they can reaſonably deſire.

In the firſt word cuſtom has placed the accent on the firſt ſyllable; in the ſecond word, wh may be conſidered as a kind of derivative, it is transferred to the ſecond ſyllable: but as the ſyllable had the preference in the radical, ſome diſtinction is to be ſhewn to it in the derivat and therefore it muſt be pronounced accordingly; in the third inſtance the original word is ther compounded, and though the accent is retained on the ſame which is now become the ſyllable, yet as the additional ſyllable is peculiarly ſignificant, it is here likewiſe entitled to diſtinction, and both the con and the ſub are to be fully pronounced. In the laſt inſtance, the wo further transformed, and for the ſake of euphony the fifth ſyllable now bears the accent, for the reaſon before aſſigned, the three firſt ſyllables are all peculiarly important, and th fore ought to be diſtinctly heard in the pronunciation.

This illuſtration will hold good in a great variety of other inſtances, and I need only that verbs of two ſyllables are generally accented on the laſt, eſpecially ſuch as are derived the French and Latin. The active and paſſive participles, the tenſes and perſons, and a tives in ive all retain the accent of the verbs from which they are derived. Polyſyllables the moſt part, eſpecially thoſe that are derived from the learned languages, have their ac on the antepenultima or third ſyllable from the laſt. As to the reſt it ſeems to be conſi with the genius and cuſtom of the Engliſh language to make the ſyllabical accent eith coincide with, or at leaſt to place it as near to the firſt ſyllable as poſſible.

Emphaſis, or what ſome call the oratorial accent, is a particular ſtreſs or modulation o voice on ſome particular word or part of a ſentence, and may be expreſſed in a more loud, more low, in a more ſmart and poignant, or in a more ſerious and ſolemn tone of voice the reſt of the ſentence, according to the different ſenſe of the paſſage, or the different which the ſpeaker would have to be produced by it; and is juſt the ſame thing appli words, as the accent before deſcribed applied to ſyllables.

This emphaſis or modulation of the voice is ſo totally different from the ſyllabical accent, t it cannot be found in any inſtance ſtrictly to coincide with it; it frequently occurs, and netimes with great advantage, in numerous compoſition, where an accented ſyllable would troy all the harmony of the verſe. The place where the emphaſis ſhould be laid is ſometimes eedingly obvious, but to point out the beſt method of laying on this emphaſis, is a taſk to ich I profeſs myſelf to be exceedingly inadequate.

" If it had been an enemy or a ſtranger, I could have born it; but it was my neighbour, my friend." " Do you call upon me, or upon him to anſwer that queſtion ?" " Upon you, Sir." Darius was conquered by Alexander." " Was Darius conquered by Alexander ? He was. Was Darius conquered by Alexander ? Yes, Darius. Was Darius conquered by Alexander ? Abſolutely conquered. Was Darius conquered by Alexander ? Yes, by Alexander."

The quantity of a ſyllable is the time which is taken up in the pronunciation, without any pect to accent or emphaſis, which may fall indifferently on a long or ſhort ſyllable.

yllables are long when the vowel or vowels which conſtitute them are not immediately ned in pronunciation with the following conſonant : as, āll, băll, bŏok, beaŭty.

All monoſyllables and all accented ſyllables in e final are long : as, replēte, conſpīre, ſublīme, pōſe, revīle, tōne, tūne, tīme. Monoſyllables ending in a vowel are generally : long as, my, ſhe, thee.

All accented ſyllables ending in a vowel are long : as, comply, repartee: the interjection O, pronoun I, and the emphatical the, are always long.

A and O before ll, lt and ld are always long: as, tall, ball, bald, halt, toll, told, colt. I ore gh is long : as, ſigh, ſight.

yllables are ſhort when the vowel or vowels which conſtitute them are immediately joined pronunciation with the following conſonant : as, in, pin, ſin, an, add, heavy, heavier.

he ſyllable which immediately follows the accent is ſhort : as, reſpĭte, ſatyr, publĭcan, itiŏnal.

he articles a and the, when not emphatical, are ſhort : as, " I ſaw a woman," " I went he man."

A before v and d is frequently ſhort : as, heavy, ready, ſteady.

DISSERTATION VII.

On numerous Compoſition.

ROM what has been ſaid of accent, emphaſis and quantity, we may deduce the principles of numerous compoſition. And here we need not run into all the nice diſtinctions of Latin and Greek poetry. Three kinds of feet at moſt may, I think, beſufficient. ll them the Iambic, the Anapæſt, and the Trochaic.

he Iambic conſiſts of two ſyllables with an accent on the laſt: as, appeár, reſíſt, comply, nd. The Anapæſt conſiſts of three ſyllables with an accent on the laſt : as, alamóde, apénd, recomménd, reparteé. The Trochaic conſiſts of two ſyllables with the accent on the : as, hap′py, bet′ter, com′mon, pli′ant, am′ple. Theſe three feet with an odd ſyllable at beginning or end of a line will be found ſufficient for all the meaſures of Engliſh e.

he Iambic meaſure is by far the more ſounding and majeſtic, whether it conſiſts of four, ſix, , ten or twelve ſyllables, and is therefore beſt ſuited to the more important and ſerious ects.

— As new awaked from ſoundeſt ſleep, on the flowery herb, I found me laid lmy ſweat, which with his beams the ſun dried, and on the reeking moiſture fed.
t towards heaven my wondering eyes I turned,
gazed awhile the ample ſky :———
who I was, or where, or from what cauſe, v not : to ſpeak I tried, and forthwith
ſpake :
ongue obeyed and readily could name te'er I ſaw. Thou Sun, ſaid I, fair light !
thou enlightened earth, ſo freſh and gay !
lls and dales, ye rivers, woods and plains !
ye that live and move, fair creatures, tell,
if ye ſaw, how came I thus, how here.

Milton.

Hear, all ye Trojan, all ye Grecian bands !
What Paris, author of the war, demands.
Your ſhining ſwords within the ſheath reſtrain,
And pitch your lances in the yielding plain.
Here in the midſt, in either army's ſight,
He dares the Spartan king to ſingle fight ;
And wills that Helen and the raviſhed ſpoil,
That cauſed the conteſt, ſhall reward the toil.
Let theſe the brave triumphant victor grace,
And different nations part in leagues of peace.

Pope's Homer.

Should fate command me to the fartheſt verge
Of the green earth, to diſtant barbarous climes,
Rivers unknown to ſong ; where firſt the ſun
Gilds Indian mountains, or his ſetting beams
Glance on th' Atlantic iſles ; 'tis nought to me :
Since God is ever preſent, ever felt,

In the void waſte, as in the city full :
And where he vital ſpreads, there muſt be joy.

The ſpacious firmament on high,
With all the blue etherial ſky,
And ſpangled heavens, a ſhining frame,
Their great original proclaim.
Addiſon.

Keep ſilence, all created things,
And wait your Maker's nod ;
My ſoul ſtands trembling while ſhe ſings
The honours of her God.

Chained to his throne, a volume lies,
With all the fates of men,
With every angel's form and ſize,
Drawn by th' eternal pen.

His Providence unfolds the book,
And makes his counſels ſhine ;
Each opening leaf, and every ſtroke,
Fulfils ſome great deſign.

Here, he exalts neglected worms
To ſceptres and a crown ;
And there, the following page he turns,
And treads the monarch down.
Watt

O the rich depths of love divine !
Of bliſs a boundleſs ſtore !
Dear Saviour, let me call thee mine ;
I cannot wiſh for more !

On thee alone my hope relies,
Beneath thy croſs I fall ;
My Lord, my life, my ſacrifice,
My Jeſus, and my All. Theodoſi

But now Don Phœbus joins the middle ſky,
And liberty unbars her priſon door ;
And like a ruſhing torrent out they fly,
And now the graſſy cirque han covered o'er,
With boiſterous revel rout and wild uproar ;
A thouſand ways in wanton rings they run ;
Heaven ſhield their ſhort lived paſtimes, I implore !
For well may freedom, earſt ſo dearly won,
Appear to Britiſh elf more gladſome than th
ſun. Shenſton in imitation of Spenſ

The Iambic, as to ſound, has all the majeſty and perfection of numerous compoſition, an is therefore juſtly propoſed as the ſtandard of poetic harmony. To conſtitute the pure Iamb the even ſyllables muſt all have a peculiar diſtinction ; they muſt be accented, or they muſt b monoſyllables, or, if neither, they muſt at leaſt be diſtinctly heard in the pronunciation.

What next I bring, ſhall pleaſe thee, be aſſured,
Thy likeneſs, thy fit help, thy other ſelf,
Thy wiſh exactly to thy heart's deſire.
Milton.

Thou moſt indulgent, moſt tremendous power,
Still more tremendous for thy wonderous love.
Young.

Thomſ

In reaſon's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious* voice ;
For ever ſinging as they ſhine,
The hand that made us is divine.
Addiſ

The lines cited above are all made up of pure Iambics, and are therefore, as to meaſure, th moſt perfectly harmonious.

For the ſake of variety, in the Iambic meaſure, a Trochee is frequently admitted in the b ginning of the line.

Welcome, ye ſhades, ye bowery thickets, hail. Thomſ
Happy the heart where graces reign. Wat

This foot is very little interuption to the harmony, and when well choſen may be conſide perhaps, rather as a beauty than a defect.

In the heroic meaſure an accented ſyllable is ſometimes introduced in the fifth place.

Eve, rightly call'd mother of all mankind. Milt

This is a greater interruption to the harmony, and may well be conſidered as a defect. If t accent fails on any other odd ſyllable the harmony for the moſt part is entirely deſtroyed, a the line degenerates into ſomething worſe than mere proſe. The much admired diſtich Denham may ſeem to be an exception to this, as it affords an inſtance of an accented ſyllab in the third place.

Though deep, yet clear ; though gentle, yet not dull :
Strong without rage ; without o'erflowing full.

But I conceive there are two reaſons why this has not the diſagreeable effect that might ha been expected. Without is a compound word, and has much the ſame ſound as though it w two diſtinct words ; both the ſyllables are diſtinct, and ſounded with nearly the ſame ſtreſs voice : add to this that both the foregoing and the following words are exceedingly ſtrong emphatical ; ſo that, in fact, the firſt foot is a Trochee, and the ſecond an iambic ; and co ſequently the harmony is ſufficiently preſerved.

A weak, obſcure or unaccented ſyllable where the meaſure requires a full and diſtinct o is always a defect in the poetry.

And an immortal crown. Doddri

Here it may be obſerved that one of the words and or an requires an emphaſis beyond wha natu ral or uſual, and this circumſtance renders the line unharmonious and diſagreeable. e we may likewiſe aſſign the reaſon why long words have generally an unhappy effect in ry; the rapidity of pronunciation renders many of the ſyllables exceedingly ſhort and ob- e, and when any of thoſe coincide with the even ſyllables they greatly interrupt the proper ncy and harmony of the verſe.

---

* In poetic meaſure the two ſhort ſyllables in the natural or proper dactyles coaleſce in pronunciation, only fill the place of one obſcure or unaccented ſyllable.

His bright appearances, or footſteps trace. Milton.
To beggarly vile appetites deſcend. Young.

when theſe obſcure ſyllables fall on the end of the line the effect is ſtill more unhappy.

Inhoſpitable appeared and deſolate. Milton.
The firſt of men in ſovereign miſery. Pope's Homer.
But from our comment on the comedy. Young.

e addition of an obſcure ſyllable at the end of the line is another defect which ought to be ided. The words power, prayer, heaven, even, &c. are indeed to be conſidered as mono- ables, and therefore may be admitted; but this licence ſeems to be carried too far in the owing inſtances, and many more that might be given.

And ſqueeze my hand, and bid me come to-morrow.

iſtinct and emphatical ſyllable may be introduced almoſt in any place without the leaſt ry or hazard to the verſe; but weak and obſcure ſyllables ſhould be avoided as much as ible.

whole line may conſiſt of diſtinct monoſyllables and ſound much better than one which has ng word in it.

To puſh me from the ſcene, or hiſs me there. Young.
Vext when he ſpoke, but yet they heard him ſpeak. Pope.
Whilſt all the ſtars that round her burn. Addiſon.

is there, perhaps, an odd place in the whole line but what may admit of an emphatical d, though not of an accented ſyllable.

O dart from thence one cheering ray,
And turn my midnight into day. Flatman.

ny of the defects above mentioned have been admitted, or at leaſt ſuffered to paſs, for the e of the greater variety; but I am perſuaded that, without theſe, the introduction of the chee as above exemplified, the proper mixture of monoſyllables and polyſyllables, the dif- nt poſition of the pauſes, the proper emphaſis, and in general a mode of expreſſion adapted he ſenſe, will, in all caſes, afford a ſufficient, a pleaſing, and I was going to ſay an infinite iety in the conſtruction of Engliſh Verſe.

d was the ranſom paid? it was: and paid hat can exalt the bounty more) for you.
e ſun beheld it—No, the ſhocking ſcene ve back his chariot: midnight veiled his face; ſuch as this; not ſuch as nature makes:
midnight new! a dread eclipſe (without poſing ſpheres) from her Creator's frown!
, didſt thou fly thy Maker's pain? or ſtart that enormous load of human guilt,
Which bowed his bleſſed head; o'erwhelmed his croſs;
Made groan the centre, burſt earth's marble womb,
With pangs, ſtrange pangs! delivered of her dead.
Hell howled, and heaven that hour let fall a tear:
Heaven wept, that man might ſmile, heaven bled, that man Might never die.——— Young.

he Trochaic meaſure is leſs majeſtic and ſerious than the Iambic.

iſe, O praiſe the name divine;
iſe him at the hallowed ſhrine;
the firmament on high
its Maker's praiſe reply.
his acts and power ſupreme,
your ſongs ſuggeſt a theme;
the harp no longer mute,
nd the trumpet, touch the lute.
Let the organ in his praiſe
Learn its loudeſt note to raiſe,
And the cymbal's varied ſound
From the vaulted roof rebound.
All, who vital breath enjoy,
In his praiſe that breath employ;
And in one great chorus join;
Praiſe, O praiſe the name divine. Merrick.

n the Trochaic meaſure the odd ſyllables muſt have the diſtinction, juſt as the even ones had he Iambic.

Trochaic verſe conſiſts of one or more Trochees terminated by a full or accented ſyllable, admits of little or no variation.

ſhort or obſcure ſyllable is ſometimes added, as a kind of ſplayfooted rhyme, at the end of line.

Jeſus,

Jeſus, full of all compaſſion,
  Hear thy humble ſuppliant's cry:
Let me know thy great ſalvation,
  Leſt I languiſh, faint, and die.
In the world of endleſs ruin,
  Let it never, Lord, be ſaid,
"Here's a ſoul that periſhed ſuing
  "For the boaſted Saviour's aid."
Saved! the deed ſhall ſpread new glory
  Through the ſhining worlds above;
Angels ſing the pleaſing ſtory,
  All enraptured with thy love.

Turn

The Anapeſtic meaſure is more quick and lively, and therefore beſt ſuited to ſongs and trivi ſubjects.

From Lincoln to London rode forth our young ſquire,
To bring down a wife whom the ſwains might admire;
But in ſpite of whatever the mortal could ſay,
The goddeſs objected the length of the way.

To give up the opera, the park and the ball,
For to view the ſtag's horns in an old country hall:
To have neither China nor India to ſee!
Nor a laceman to plague in a morning,—not ſhe.

To forſake the dear playhouſe, Quin, Garrick, and Clive,
Who by dint of mere humour had kept her alive:
To forego the full box for his loneſome abode,
O heavens! ſhe ſhould faint, ſhe ſhould die on the road.

To be ſure ſhe could breathe no where elſe than in town;
Thus ſhe talked like a wit, and he looked like a clown:
But while honeſt Harry deſpaired to ſucceed,
A coach with a coronet trailed her to Tweed.

Yes, theſe are the ſcenes where with Iris ſtray'd,
But ſhort was her ſway for ſo lovely a maid!
In the bloom of her youth to a cloiſter ſhe ru
In the bloom of her graces, too fair for a nu
Ill grounded, no doubt, a devotion muſt prov
So fatal to beauty, ſo killing to love!

Ye ſhepherds, give ear to my lay,
  And take no more care of my ſheep;
They have nothing to do but to ſtray,
  I have nothing to do but to weep.
Yet do not my folly reprove,
  She was fair, and my paſſion begun;
She ſmiled—and I could not but love;
  She is faithleſs, and I am undone.

I have found out a gift for my fair,
  I have found where the wood pigeons breed
But let me that plunder forbear,
  She will ſay 'twas a barbarous deed.
For he ne'er could be true ſhe averred,
  Who would rob a poor bird of its young:
And I loved her the more when I heard
  Such tenderneſs fall from her tongue.

Shenſt

In the pure Anapeſtic the diſtinction of accent or ſtreſs of the voice lies on every third ſyllabl

In the bloom of her youth to a cloiſter ſhe run,
In the bloom of her graces, too fair for a nun.
Not a pine in my grove is there ſeen,
  But with tendrils of woodbine is bound.

By dropping a ſyllable the firſt foot is frequently converted into an Iambic.

With her how I ſtrayed amid fountains and bowers,
Or loitered behind, and collected the flowers.

In this meaſure a ſlightly accented ſyllable may fall out of place and be no great interruptio to the harmony.

Now becauſe miſtreſs-Lucy to thee is well known.
But the while honeſt Harry deſpaired of ſucceſs.

In the ſtructure of this verſe care however ſhould be taken that no unuſual effort be neceſſary i pronunciation to place the ſtreſs of the voice on the proper ſyllable.

For to view the ſtag's horns in an old country hall.

An obſcure ſyllable or a ſhort word is ſometimes added to the end of the line, in this as we as in the other meaſures.

And Harlequin too, 'tis in vain to require it,
And ſhe wondered how folks had the face to deſire it.
